Schucks Buy O'Conner Farm

MERRILL, March 6—One of the largest farm transactions of recent years was consummated with the purchase of the O'Conner ranch by the Schuck brothers.

The more than 400-acre ranch located two and one-half miles north of Merrill was originally one of the first sheep and hay ranches in the county. It was purchased in 1918 by Hugh and Dennis O'Conner.

Clifford and Claude Schuck, Tulelake residents prominent in business and ranching are taking possession at once of the entire holdings with the exception of the main ranch house, which will be occupied by the O'Connors until July 1, according to the agreement.

The Schucks plan to grow grain, clover and potatoes on their latest acquisition. The O'Connors have no definite plans at the present time.

Debate Starts On Gasoline Tax Bill
SACRAMENTO, Calif., March 5 (AP)—Debate on a proposal to boost the state gasoline tax to six cents and the diesel fuel tax to nine cents was begun in the senate today.

By agreement, the tax hike will not be brought to a final roll call until numerous other amendments to the Collier committee's $2,800,000,000 super highway bill have been considered. The bill in its present form would boost the present 3 cent tax by only 2 cents and the diesel from 3 cents to only 7 1/2 cents.

Wray To Head Tule Company

TULELAKE, March 6—A. J. Wray, former traveling representative of the J. I. Case Implement company, is the new manager of the Tulelake Machinery company, succeeding W. G. "Doc" Noggle, who served in that capacity for two years.

Wray in his association with the Case company has traveled over much of the United States, Canada and Mexico and is a comparative newcomer to Tulelake. The announcement in the change of management was made this week by Shuck Brothers, owners.

P. V. Burns, recently of Redding, has also been added to the staff in the capacity of salesman. Other members of the personnel are Gordon Wyan, Merrill, who will be in charge of the parts department; Ira Thornberg, Merrill, and Ellis Benbrooks, Tulelake, in the machinery assembly department.

Noggle, who lives in Klamath Falls, has established offices with William Kandra of Tulelake and Ivan Kandra, Merrill, in the building with Charles K. Wiese, realtor, for the purpose of distributing quonset buildings in this territory.

"WHEN I SAY COFFEE I MEAN FOLGER'S!"

the BAD LANDS prosper...

Neighbors shook their heads back in 1942 when Gaylord Shively bought his 125-acre farm in the Scappoose Drainage District. The soil was depleted, much of the land poorly drained, and the whole place infested with weeds. The man who moved off when Shively took over had found it difficult to sustain 16 cows on the 125-acre tract.

Today Shively has 52 head of cattle, including 35 producing milk cows. The farm has become so productive that this year the Scappoose farmer has been able to market 100 tons of surplus hay. Newspaper stories and radio broadcasts have pointed to the Shively farm operation as an outstanding example in agricultural development. In four years acres of wasteland have grown rich and profitable.

Shively's success with land which had been given up as useless is a tribute to modern, scientific farming methods. The first year he worked his newly acquired soil he had to buy 100 tons of hay and 50 tons of grain to feed the 40 head of cattle he had brought with him to the Scappoose farm. Neighbors urged him either to cut down his herd or to give up entirely.

Shively did neither. Instead he applied to the government agricultural conservation program which is set up to provide half the cost in carrying out practices to conserve and improve soil and water resources.

The Columbia County AAACommitee, headed by Chairman W. C. Johnson of Mist, approved a program of soil building practices, drainage, pasture, and irrigation improvement for the farm and Shively went to work.

In 1943 he launched his program. First he turned under 15 acres of green manure crops and gave his ailing pasture a two-ton shot of phosphate. The following year he sweetened the sour soil with 18 tons of lime and tackled the drainage problem by constructing 1700 feet of new drainage ditch. He continued both projects in 1945 by giving the soil 37 additional tons of lime and digging another 3200 feet of drainage ditch.

That same year he reorganized the farm's make-shift irrigation system, moving 4020 yards of dirt to construct a permanent lateral and installing 143 feet of 24-inch pipe. Irrigation was necessary because, though the land was water-sogged in the Spring, it dried up too rapidly when the hot summer months came on. He rounded out his 1945 program by seeding 20 acres of pasture land to improved grasses and by getting rid of 55 acres of bull thistles before they had a chance to seed.

Last year Shively added another 40 tons of lime to sweeten the soil, seeded down another 20 acres of pasture to better grasses and legumes, and dug another 1400 feet of drainage ditch. Although he has all ready tripled production on his revitalized acres, Shively feels that his development program has just begun. He had proved to himself and the community that a farm, properly worked, can grow richer and more productive with the passing years.

The First National believes that there is a moral to be drawn from the story of Gaylord Shively... a moral that emphasizes the grass root initiative, the imagination and integrity which characterizes the Oregon farmer.

The First National Bank of Portland is interested vitally in soil conservation and reclamation and in all projects that advance the interests of Oregon agriculture. Whatever your needs in farm financing, you will find friendly co-operation at the First National.
