

Senate Seeks Votes To Override Snell's Veto Of Camp White Hospital

SALEM, April 2 (AP)—The search for votes to override Governor Earl Snell's veto of the Camp White acquisition bill began in the senate today with the outcome in doubt.

The bill, which would order the board of control to acquire the state hospital for use as a state hospital, was vetoed by the governor late yesterday on grounds that the board has no constitutional authority to acquire the $8,000,000 plant, and because the governor thinks the state would be better off by spending its money on existing institutions.

To override the veto in the senate, 20 votes would be needed. There were only 18 votes for the bill when the senate passed it last Friday.

If the senate overrides, the house is expected to follow suit. The bill passed the house Monday 46 to 10, or six votes more than the two-thirds margin required.

The senate tax committee's request to increase state income taxes for persons with larger incomes was rejected today by the house tax committee.

The community property bill, passed by the house yesterday and sent to the governor, has for its purpose the saving of $14,000,000 a year in federal taxes paid by more wealthy Oregon residents. But it also will cost the state more than $1,000,000 a year in state income taxes.

With the state deficit growing even larger, the senate tax group wanted the state income tax rates increased in higher brackets to offset this $1,000,000 loss to the state.

The fate of the state postwar readjustment and development commission and the Willamette basin commission was in doubt today after the senate refused to approve appropriations for these two agencies as long as the appropriations were contained with other appropriation items. So the senate asked its ways and means committee to bring in separate appropriation bills for these two agencies so the senate can decide whether to kill them off.

A senate-house conference committee agreed that the law setting up rural school districts should become effective January 1, 1948, the date fixed by the senate. The house had wanted it to become effective a year later. The law was passed by the people last November.

The house defeated a senate bill to make candidates for county assessors take examinations given by the state tax commission, but a move to reconsider was expected today.

The house passed senate measures calling for an interim committee to investigate care and education of the blind, and to charge the name of the attorney general's office to state department of justice, with authority over attorneys for all state activities.

The house sent to the governor two bills to make traffic laws apply to driving on ocean beaches, and to prohibit taking of sand or gravel from the beaches without permission from the state highway commission. The house killed a senate measure to appoint an interim committee to investigate doctors, osteopaths, chiropractors and other persons who practice the healing arts.

The senate adopted two house resolutions for interim committees to investigate Columbia river fisheries and the sources of the state's meat supply.

Reds Invade U.S. Fishing

WASHINGTON, April 2 (AP)—Senator Magnuson (D-Wash.) complained to the state department today that Russians using 16 ships which the United States gave the Soviet Union during the war have "invaded" north Pacific fishing waters customarily fished by Americans.

Furthermore, Magnuson said in a letter to Secretary Marshall, he is informed the Russians intend to sell the fish in American markets.

"Our humanitarianism in helping them during the war," Magnuson said, "is proving a double-edged economic sword."

Magnuson declared the fish industry of this country has little tariff protection and that Iceland and Scandinavian countries already are "flooding the market" with foreign fish.

He said the north Pacific fishing fleet must get under way in a month's time and asked Marshall to determine in advance what Russia plans to do.

"We should provide protection for the fishing industry from this threat just as quickly as possible," Magnuson said.
