

City Councilmen Take Up Matter Of Fire Protection At Municipal Airport Site

The thousands of dollars worth of facilities and equipment at the municipal airport that the city is taking over from the war assets administration is not adequately protected. It was brought out at city council meeting Monday evening.

Fire Chief Ambrose told the city fathers that at least eight men should be employed in the airport fire department. It was pointed out that that is about the number employed at present at the airport by the Brice Mortgage company, the contract custodian for the government. A suggestion was brought up by Councilman Paul O. Landry that four men might work out all right if a volunteer force could be formed from employees at the airport.

Discussion of the question of bureau of reclamation helping with the expenses, since the airport fire department could also provide protection for bureau buildings at the airport, was stopped when it was learned that the government would not participate. When this was learned, the opinion was expressed that if a government building caught on fire the city should just let it burn. The mayor asked Chief Ambrose and Airport Manager W. B. Whitcomb to get together and draw up a plan for fire protection at the airport.

Mayor Ed Ostendorf said that the city's agreement with the WAA was ready for him to sign and all that was needed was the council's permission for him to sign it. The council granted him the permission and the airport facilities should soon become a part of the city properties.

One new piece of property was added to the city when the council voted to accept the gift of the late Clara A. Moore of her home and its surrounding grounds located at Main and Riverside. With the property was accepted two cash donations as provided in her will, $1000 to be used to fix up the grounds, and another $1000 for the upkeep of the city cemetery.

Elmer Balsiger appeared before the council to represent the newly-formed Klamath Rodeo association. He asked the council to waive $1500 of carnival fees as has been the usual custom when a show is sponsored by a non-profit organization. The council agreed.

Councilman Wendell Smith asked the council to take some action on tearing down an old abandoned house just off Oregon on Harriman which was becoming a hazard for small children who were playing in it. He said that he thought it was on city-owned property. Police Judge Franey was asked to investigate the matter with action to be taken by Building Inspector Walter Salsbery.

A letter was read to the council from W. L. Hutchinson, 2221 Applegate, complaining that the curbing in front of his home was
