JOE DOE WRITES:

Dear Butch:
Tonight when I got home from work my wife, Ida, was all bubbling over with excitement and says "Joe, we had the most wonderful luncheon party at Dora's house today. Oh! It was simply divine." I says, "That's nice, Babe, what did you eat?" I just can't wait to tell you," she says, "Well, you know Dora buys her meat from Butch, at The Palace Market, the same as we do. It seems as though he got in some 'filly minyon' beef steaks while she was there yesterday and he suggested that she have them for her birthday luncheon. Oh, Joe, they simply melted in your mouth." "Now wait a minute, Babe, I says. Those couldn't have been beef steaks. That Butch has got a sense of humor and he must have been taking Dora for a ride."

That casual remark caused Ida to stiffen up in her best fighting stance. Both hands on her hips, her lips drawn tight and a couple of stilettoes poised to dart out of each eye. "Oh, Joe, you are impossible. You know Butch wouldn't do a thing like that," she says.

Well, Butch, I knew then that the battle was on so I retreated to my shaving room to take a shower. But as usual, I was stuck. The towel racks were all draped with Ida's nylon leg casings and the shower curtain rod was covered with other dainty underthings. Even the washbowl was full of filmy stuff she had soaked. Well, I stalled around a few minutes while Ida dished up the evening meal. The only thing good about the whole evening so far was the ground round you sold her for supper.

The temporary truce is on and Ida is curled up in her favorite chair, while I write you for confirmation on this 'filly minyon' business. Please tell her right out in plain words that they are fish, not beef steaks, as I want complete vindication for once in my life.

Don't come up with the same kind of answer you did last time when I said sweetbreads came from Fluhrer's and Ida claimed they came from calves. You remember, you said sweetbreads came from the neck located below the trachea near the esophagus. I didn't have time to look up those dollar six-bit words. And anyway, I knew you were using them for a stall so I haven't brought the subject up with Ida since.

Signed, JOE DOE.
