Many of us who have passed the "over 21" mark too often lose touch with the enthusiasm and imagination of childhood. Whether we are experienced or not, we often miss the joys of adventure and discovery which are left behind at some early age. Summer is the time for remembering some of the young spirit which should and can belong to all of us no matter how many years we have chalked up on the calendar of life.

One of the easiest ways of recapturing is also one of the simplest. It is just a matter of getting out in the summertime with the children. One of the most active children's groups, not only in summertime but all the year round, is the Girl Scout group in your neighborhood. From one end of the year to the other these youngsters, through 18, offer their services in behalf of many community projects. The scope of their activities range from baby-sitting to hospital aide work, from painting and drawing to cooking over a backyard fireproof. Throughout these next few months you will probably see groups of them in their green uniforms—brown for the younger ones—marching off to day camps or full-time camps or on camping trips. Does it occur to you, however, that for most of these girls a trip to camp will mean, at most, a mere two weeks? Many of the Girl Scouts in your home town may not have even that short time away. In other words, almost all of these girls still face with 16 unrestricted hours a day for two whole months.

These girls need grown-ups to guide them. They need suggestions and some supervision. They need friendly adult help and specific knowledge whether you are the "out-door" type or not, you may have the information of skills that they will want to learn. If you have a hobby that leads no further afield than your own backyard, there are youngsters with whom you can share it. In offering your services to Girl Scouts of your community this summer, you can make a two-fold investment for yourself. You will have the knowledge that you are playing a part in a really important constructive youth program, and you will have the fun of working with these youngsters in the happiest time of all their years. Why not make this summer one of the most successful in your life by dropping in at your local Girl Scout office, 412 Main, or by calling them at 4541.
