

Atom Power Issue Talked

LAKE SUCCESS, N. Y., June 3 (AP)—The United Nations struggled to reconcile American and Russian differences on atomic control today in the face of a warning that the United States intends to maintain and increase its supreme position in the field of atomic energy and atomic weapons.

David E. Lilienthal, chairman of the U. S. atomic energy commission, told the United Nations yesterday this would remain the purpose of his country until international machinery for control was established by the world agency.

With this warning before them, delegates of the UN atomic energy commission met to continue their efforts at bringing Russia and the United States into agreement on whether or not the veto can be used in the security council if a country commits an atomic crime.

The United States is insisting that the veto must not be used to prevent punishment of a violator of atomic controls. Russia wants any international atomic control agency to come under the jurisdiction of the security council where the five major powers have the privilege of a veto.

Lilienthal told the commission delegates that their task of charting a program for international control was of "supreme importance to the peace of the world."

In the interim the plants grew from a weight of 1 1/2 pounds to 2 1/2 pounds per 100.

The airline now plans 14 plane loads.
