

7th, Main Navy Unit Draws Many

A naval reserve mobile unit, set up for business, is now occupying the northeast corner of 7th and Main with a display of captured Japanese equipment, naval electronics equipment and a scale model of an aircraft carrier done in transparent plastic.

The aircraft carrier model took a year and a half to build and is exact in every detail. The Japanese battle gear was taken off the captured battleship, Nagato, before it was used as a guinea pig in the Bikini atom bomb tests.

Lt. T. L. Comer is in charge of the group, which includes Ensign C. C. Brown, second in charge, CBM Bud Pursey, CMM Derrill Joslin, CQM Murray Anderson, PG 3/c Ben Ovre, SM 2/c Andrew Glick and CM 2/c Harold Hastings.

Purpose of the unit's visit is to sign up as many men between the ages of 17 and 35 as possible in the naval reserve. The unit will be here until the evening of July 28.

Ensign Brown stressed the fact that everyone is invited, not alone those who are interested in joining the naval reserve. He also noted that the unit has several interesting films which one of the unit members will be happy to show to any groups or organizations interested. These include "Operation Crossroads," a picture story of the atom bomb tests at Bikini atoll, and "The Fleet That Came to Stay," a record of the navy's fight during the Okinawa campaign.

A highlight of the naval reserve program, according to Ensign Brown, is the fact that men may join with or without previous military training, but service in any branch of the armed forces counts in determining naval reserve rating.
