Old Time Paper Proves That News Doesn't Change

By HAL BOYLE
ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP)—News doesn't change—only the men who make the news.

To prove this you have only to glance back through the files of old newspapers such as "The Maryland Gazette," a weekly that has been portraying the American scene—with a few forced interruptions—since 1727.

Take, for example, government experiments in crop control in recent years.

In 1728—some 218 years ago—Maryland planters protested heatedly that the London dealers had sold their tobacco below agreed prices.

The London merchants, as reported by the Maryland Gazette, sent back word that market was overstocked and made these suggestions to the planters to hold the prices stable:

The Old Song
"First, by planting less tobacco every year."
"Second, by destroying every year all trash and mean tobacco."
"Third, by forbearing to plant every fourth year."

Does that sound familiar? Although printers at the time were customarily under $400 bond (big money then!) not to publish news embarrassing to the colonial governors or the king, William Parks of the Gazette printed both sides of this commercial controversy—one of the kind that flowered later into revolution.

Animal stories were news even in those long ago days. An issue of December, 1728, contains a dispatch about a cat reported to be 140 years old and adds in proof that "several persons now living remember her spaghetti dinner on Thursday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Reg Thomas and Margaret Jane and Albert Dearborn were Friday dinner guests at the Leavitt home.

above 60 years." It remained for the 20th century to match with accounts of toads that stayed alive for decades in building cornerstones.

Advertisements in those days didn't come from department stores. They were principally about rum, real estate (housing was hard to find) and runaway slaves.

The price of Jamaica rum in Annapolis on March 11, 1728; per single gallon, 75 cents. Lemonade costs more than that now.

The Gazette, like other colonial newspapers that served as well-springs for American liberty, ran from one to four pages. It had a subscription rate of only $3.15 a year. Leading colonial figures contributed to it, and it had special correspondents in London, Paris, Prague, Lisbon and half a dozen other European countries.

There were no giant press associations to speed information. A headline of October 21, 1762, announced a royal birth the previous August 12: Great Joy to the Nation!
