

ALL-AMERICA 1947

All-America Second And Third Teams

SECOND TEAM	POSITION	THIRD TEAM
ROBERT MANN, Michigan	END	BARNEY POOLE, Mississippi
ZYGMONT CZAROSKI, Notre Dame	TACKLE	JOHN FERRARO, Southern Calif.
LEO NOMMELIN, Minnesota	GUARD	JOSEPH STEFFY, Army
RICHARD SCOTT, Navy	CENTER	JAY RHODEMYRE, Kentucky
ROD FRANZ, California	GUARD	MIKE DIMITRO, UCLA
MALACHI MILLS, VMI	TACKLE	GEORGE CONNOR, Notre Dame
IRE OWENS, Illinois	END	LENNY FORD, Michigan
CHALMERS ELLIOTT, Michigan	BACK	CLYDE SCOTT, Arkansas
CHARLES CONERLY, Mississippi	BACK	ANTHONY MINISI, Pennsylvania
HARRY GILMER, Alabama	BACK	BOBBY LAYNE, Texas
CHARLES JUSTICE, North Carolina	BACK	JACK CLOUD, William and Mary

By Hale Scarbrough

Error In Memory Was Cause Of Wangle Over Henley-Amity Game Site

The inside dope on that wangle about where the Henley-Amity football game is to be played is that Tom Piggott, OHSAA secretary, informally informed the Amity team it could choose the field because the championship game was played at the field of Henley's choice last year. He was mistaken. The class B championship contest of the 1946 football season was played at La Grande, between Henley and North Powder.

It was a semi-final game of the tourney which was played here on the Modoc green, between the Hornets and the Amity Warriors. Piggott's memory was in error.

So when he and the directors of OHSAA voted for Klamath Falls as the site of the Saturday game, the Amity backers wanted to know why.

A pretty smooth political campaign was waged by Max Marvin, George Elliott and others to bring about locating the contest here, and the assurance given by this newspaper that it would at least break even financially helped win over Piggott and OHSAA. McMinville wanted the game badly, but apparently didn't post any insurance of monetary success.

Washington Flunks News Sponsors

While the newspaper has undertaken the sponsorship of the Hornet-Warrior clash, that doesn't detract from the fact that the game is for the football championship of Oregon high schools having less than 150 enrollment. It is not a bowl game or anything of the sort.

The Washington state high school athletic board has decided it will not longer sanction promotion of athletic events by individual newspapers, even for philanthropic purposes. The board itself, through the coaches association, will be in complete charge of all high school athletic contests.

A Seattle newspaper last August sponsored an all-star prep school football game, and may have intended to make it an annual affair. But no longer.

Reno Turns Down Pelican Date

On the subject of high school football, both Reno and Sacramento high schools have turned down propositions of home-and-home gridiron series with the Klamath Pelicans. Sacramento said its schedule was full and Reno said the distance was too far and it wasn't interested in out-of-state games.

So it begins to look as though the Pelicans will play a schedule next season which keeps them strictly in Oregon.

Pat Duff, Gordy Lenz Returning

Mark Covert's Grant high school basketball team, coming down here for the 20-30 club's annual invitational hoop party in about 10 days, contains a couple of characters very familiar to the local scene. They are Pat Duff and Gordy Lenz, both football luminaries in General uniform. George Pasero of the Journal says that Duff is good and Lenz is terrific.

The tournament will enable local fans to get their first quick line on the Pelican casha team for this season.

Astoria Chinooks Can Take Co-Hold On Cage Loop Lead

By The Associated Press

Astoria's Royal Chinooks take their first crack at a co-hold on the Pacific Coast Professional Basketball league's lead tonight by renewing festivities with the Tacoma Mountaineers whom they edged 65-60 last night with a last period rally.

In the night's only other tilt, Portland's defending titlists make another effort to hit the win column at Seattle. The Rose City quintet dropped its second in a row last night to Bellingham by a 64-55 count.

The Astoria-Tacoma clash, in which both teams were making their league debut, found Tacoma holding a 31-26 halftime lead, but a final burst of scoring sent the Oregonians out in front late in the game to stay. Hays, Astoria center, led the field with 18 points; Irv Leifer, former Eastern Washington college shotmaker, paced Tacoma with 15.

Bellingham's victory witnessed one reappearance of the almost traditional Gale Bishop scoring threat, the former Washington State performer teaming with teammate Bob Dorr for high honors with 18 each.

Allen Maul, Bellingham, potted 16, as did Portland's T. Smith.

Dr. E. M. MARSHA

Chiropractic Physician

120 N. 21st - Equine Theatre Bldg. Phone 546

Dr. E. M. MARSHA

Chiropractic Physician

120 N. 21st - Equine Theatre Bldg. Phone 546

Dr. E. M. MARSHA

Chiropractic Physician

120 N. 21st - Equine Theatre Bldg. Phone 546

Dr. E. M. MARSHA

Chiropractic Physician

120 N. 21st - Equine Theatre Bldg. Phone 546

Dr. E. M. MARSHA

Chiropractic Physician

120 N. 21st - Equine Theatre Bldg. Phone 546

Dr. E. M. MARSHA

Chiropractic Physician

120 N. 21st - Equine Theatre Bldg. Phone 546

Ten Team Loops May Be Answer

By The Associated Press

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

"The executive council, with the approval of the major leagues, had agreed that this is the only logical step," the source continued. "After its visit to California last August, during which time it listened to the demands of the Pacific Coast league, the council studied the matter carefully and decided that it would not be feasible to grant the Coast league's request. It agreed, however, that major league ball was bound to come to the coast some day."

"The council was of the opinion that two of the coast's cities—Los Angeles and San Francisco especially—were prepared for big league baseball," the informant said.

"Hollywood and Oakland were included to give the leagues better balance. With four teams in the American and National leagues, the playing schedule would be greatly simplified. The four-coast team idea would also act as a stimulant to inter-city rivalry in California."

The latest plan, however, faced determined opposition from the Pacific Coast league itself. Clarence Rowland, when informed of the movement afoot, admitted that he had heard of something brewing "along those lines," but insisted that he had never been informed directly of such a plan.

"The Pacific Coast league has only one purpose," he said, "and that is to become a major league in its entirety. We will never consent to have the majors take one, two or four clubs from us."

Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP)—The 10-team major league, which proved a dud once before, may be revived in the National and American leagues in the near future.

The executive council has drawn up preliminary plans for such a revolutionary move with the purpose of admitting four Pacific Coast league teams in the majors, the Associated Press learned from a reliable source last night.

The source added that the teams are Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Hollywood.

WEBFOOTS, OSC ROLL THROUGH EARLY TILTS

By The Associated Press

The University of Idaho Vandals were missing today from the early season ranks of the Northwest's major undefeated college basketball squads, but Oregon State and Gonzaga continued to roll along, harried but unmolested.

The Vandals fell 34-33 before the strong Gonzaga Bulldogs when the "Zags" Bill Gillingham meshed a foul shot to break a deadlock with but 30 seconds remaining. A close contest throughout, Gonzaga won the tilt from the foul line by converting 16 foules on 32 Idaho fouls.

Both Oregon and Oregon State ran into difficulty in wracking up their fourth pre-season victory. The Ducks came up with a ragged performance and snatched a 47-46 win over Portland University almost at the gun on Mary Rasmussen's field goal; and the Staters had to rally to drop Willamette 47-41 after trailing at halftime 24-20.