

A Tree For City Folks

Here a perfect specimen of a Christmas tree is obtained by topping a bent, deformed trunk of Shasta red fir. Although this fir would be useless for marketable timber, it may yet produce another tree to gladden some Yuletide hearthside. Top: The Christmas tree and the crooked stump which produced it. Center: Making the cut at an angle. The top branch left will grow vertical from such a cut, forming another tree of holiday size in a few years. Bottom: Perfect as only nature can produce, combining grace and symmetry, good color, thick needles and healthy, compact limbs. Lewis Byron Ansted, successful bidder on the Scott creek sale in the Rogue River national forest is the man in the pictures. Tree harvest picture story continues on Page seven.
