

Need Seen For Shark Protection

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 19 (AP)—The plight of the shark, big vitamin-A producer, is causing concern to West Coast fisheries experts.

Along with other commercial ocean species, the problem of dwindling shark populations was studied today by more than a score of fisheries biologists from Washington, Oregon and California.

The shark is a big business. The soupfin's liver, rich in vitamin-A, brings $10 a pound.

Marine biologists say the shark, particularly the soupfin, are badly in need of protection.

Just One Phase

The shark was just one phase of the West Coast's multi-million dollar fisheries industry under study in the current preparation of a program for the Pacific marine fisheries commission. It meets in April.

A survey is being made of tuna, salmon, crab and drag-net fishery for sole, rockfish and other bottom fish, also the striped bass, an important California sport fish.

Biologists say some of the fish population is doing well. This includes crab, increasing in number despite growing commercial hauls.

Salmon are doing well in California, but the catch has been declining in Oregon and Washington.

The biologists hope to pool information and evolve methods on Pacific fish problems which ultimately may become interstate fisheries regulations.

Hetch Hetchy Water Low

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 19 (AP)—The lowest water level in the history of the Hetch Hetchy reservoir endangers San Francisco's power supply, city officials said Wednesday.

As a result of the California drought the city's powerhouses at Moccasin dam may have to be shut down within the next 15 days.

Utilities Manager James H. Turner described the drought in the Sierra Nevada, source of the city's Hetch Hetchy supply, as "extremely serious."

Only 12,000,000,000 gallons of water remain in storage at Hetch Hetchy.

The reservoir capacity is 117,300,000,000 gallons. At this time last year, Hetch Hetchy had 40,000,000,000 gallons, and that was an unusually dry year.

Mercy Dash Saves Life

RITZVILLE, Wash., Feb. 19 (AP)—A pre-dawn mercy dash over roads state patrolmen said were "virtually impassable in patches" Wednesday was credited with saving the life of 16-month-old Dennis Hallett, stricken with diphtheria.

The race began at 1:30 a. m. when State Patrolman Roy Belach left Spokane with a supply of anti-toxin requested by Ritzville General hospital. Belach said during the trip the wheels of his state patrol car at times were nearly buried in mud. At other points, snow and ice covered the highways.

Belach arrived at Ritzville early Wednesday and the anti-toxin was administered to the infant. Attendants said the child was responding to the treatment.

Parole Move Brings Blast

CHICAGO, Feb. 19 (AP)—A veteran police reporter for the Chicago Tribune Wednesday described the federal parole board, which freed four hoodlums, as "naive" men who thought the Capone gang "was some kind of fairy tale."

James Doherty, who for 30 years has chronicled crime news for the Tribune, testified before a congressional subcommittee investigating the paroles.

At yesterday's hearing Mrs. Charlotte Campagna, wife of Louis (Little New York) Campagna, one of the parolees, said she paid $10,000 to Attorney Paul Dillon of St. Louis to help obtain the parole. Dillon once was a campaign manager for President Truman.

Doherty related he began inquiring into the paroles of the former Capone gangsters when, he said, Chicago citizens were "shocked and astounded" by the release of the men in August, 1947. They had served one-third of their ten-year sentences in alleged extortion of more than $1,000,000 from the motion picture industry.

Besides Campagna, the parolees are Paul (The Waiter) Ricca, Philip D'Andrea and Charles (Cherry Nose) Gioe.

In Washington, Doherty said, he interviewed the parole board members but they could not reveal who had interceded in the gangsters' behalf. He said the members felt the men could be rehabilitated and were "not so bad."
