

Filing Falls Off Prior To Deadline

Filing deadline for all county, district and state office candidates is March 12—Friday at 5 p. m.—but virtually all the local hats are in the ring. There has not been a single new name added to the list of candidates this week.

Gerald Rutledge, Great Northern railroad who has been prominently mentioned as a possible contestant for state legislature on the democratic ballot, has made up his mind in the negative.

He will not run.

There are two democratic candidates — Henry Semion and Tom Rustin — and two seats to be filled, therefore no contest for nomination in that party.

The republican ticket will have three candidates in E. A. Geary, Carl Steinseifer and Ed Ostendorf, and consequently a contest.

With all the candidates out, there are still very few primary races in the making. Most campaigns will come in the November general election after party standard bearers are nominated in the primary.

This is the way the various local and district offices stack up as of today:

- U. S. senator—no primary contest.
- U. S. congressman—no primary contest.
- State senator—no primary contest.
- State legislator (two seats)—republican ballot, none on democratic ticket.
- District attorney—no contest.
- Circuit clerk—no contest.
- Sheriff—contest in both parties.
- County treasurer—republican.
- County commissioner—republican contest.
- County assessor—no contest.
- County coroner—no contest.

New neighbors in our community are Mr. and Mrs. Donald Orrell from Junction City, Calif. Orrell was in general merchandising at Junction City prior to selling the business and coming to Klamath Falls last January 20. The change was made in order for him to take over the job as radio instructor at OVS, some time in April. The Orrells purchased the Felix Rousseau home in Wocus. Before the merchandising venture in California, Orrell was radio instructor at Scott Field, Ill., for one year, and he saw four years service in the U. S. navy during World War II.

Art Group To Share Building

The park board stood by its decision to give the Klamath Art association use of the old stone Hampton building at the end of Main street at a meeting Tuesday afternoon, but the landmark will be shared with other city groups.

Members of the American Revolution and the Klamath Historical society, challenged the board's decision at the city council meeting Monday. DAR representatives had asked for use of the building several months ago. They explained that they did not ask for exclusive use of the structure, but would like to hold meetings there once a month. The Historical society's interest was in preserving the building.

The Art association requested use of the Hampton building for an art gallery, and the park board felt that it is better suited for that purpose.

The art group stated that it did not want exclusive right to the structure, and both the art and DAR groups will hold their meetings there, it was finally decided.

Park board members brought out that their plan is to eventually dismantle the building, although they will welcome suggestions if any group interested can suggest a means of leaving the building standing and work it into the general scheme of Veterans Memorial park, on which it is situated.

The Hampton property and land from Center street to Link river have been purchased for park use. Mayor Ed Ostendorf explained that all of the former property owners favored tearing down the old buildings in that sector.

Park board members added that they are considering a plan to use stone from the old Hampton building, the oldest business building in the city, in a park monument, with a plaque containing historical facts about the structure.

Agricultural leaders estimate that electrically operated equipment has enabled farmers to grow a third more crops in 10 per cent less time.
