

Pacific Northwest Must Have More Power If U.S. Aluminum Supply To Last

WASHINGTON, April 14 (AP)—Rep. Horan (R-Wash.), told the house the nation cannot get enough aluminum for fast expansion of aircraft construction unless more power is supplied in the Pacific Northwest.

He said Monday that the aluminum industry has been cut back so far by dismantling war plants and power shortages that the industry now is strained to supply the demand.

"If we are going to entertain any thought whatever of building 42,500 airplanes pounds of new appliances each year for the expanded airforce and still have any aluminum left over for Mrs. America's pots and pans and the farmer's barn roof, then we'd better get busy and provide the one essential resource which can not be made available over night, electrical industrial energy," Horan said.

"Our aluminum capacity is now just half what we need quickly to expand the airforce and at the same time meet minimum commercial demands."

Little Thought Referring to proposals for a 70-group airforce, Horan said little thought has been given to how "we are going to get the airplanes" and added:

"It will be far easier to get the men to fly them and supply them on the ground than to build the airplanes themselves."

Horan said all of the aluminum ingot plants now operating in this country can turn out only 1,300,000,000 pounds annually while for war purposes the need will be for 3,700,000,000 pounds yearly.

He said large war time aluminum plants on Long Island and in New Jersey, have been dismantled.

"We can pass all the legislation we would like in this house and in either body for universal military training, a new draft, calling up the reserves and reorganizing the entire military structure," Horan said.

"But these measures will remain paper defenses until we get busy and build McNary, Foster creek and Hungry Horse dams (in Washington, Oregon, Montana) and put to work the millions of kilowatts which must be frozen into aluminum ingots before any of those laws will have any real meaning, either to ourselves or to any potential enemy."

Wally Moss In Portland Hospital

Wally Moss, democratic candidate for the office of sheriff of Klamath county, has been transferred from Klamath Valley hospital here to Good Samaritan hospital in Portland.

Moss suffered a broken back in a truck accident on Sun mountain on February 10. He is improving rapidly and advised Mrs. Moss that he hoped to be back campaigning before the May primaries. Mrs. Moss will leave Friday to visit her husband.

TRIPLETS

SALEM, April 14 (AP)—Triplets—two boys and a girl—were born to Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Walkup here yesterday.

The infants were placed in incubators, and the hospital said they were "doing fine."

A robot painter, a completely automatic painting machine, has been developed which can clean, rust-proof, paint and dry a variety of parts in record time.

Redwood Pay Scale Boosted

SAN FRANCISCO, April 14 (AP)—Redwood operators have followed the wage increase pattern shaping up in the Pacific Northwest by granting a 5-cent-an-hour increase.

Some 4000 California mill and woods workers will get the boost, retroactive to April 1.

The operators' committee, representing eight companies in Mendocino and Humboldt counties, said the increase was voluntary and had no bearing on end of the 27-month strike Monday. The committee added that the operators "naturally are pleased to learn that the Lumber and Sawmill Workers' union has ended its strike against our woods and mills."
