The Doctor Says— Joint Ailment May Be Helped

Osteoarthritis is really a mild degeneration or wearing out of some of the structures which go to make the joints. It is a sort of aging of the joints which shows up first in those joints which do the most work, like the knees, hips or fingers.

The exact cause or causes of this condition are not entirely understood. The cartilage and bone of people in some families may be particularly susceptible to early degeneration or osteoarthritis. Repeated injury also seems to promote the development of this condition. Poor posture, fatness and disturbances of blood circulation are other conditions which contribute to its development.

The end joints of the fingers frequently become enlarged. This is often accompanied by a certain amount of stiffness and soreness, though this usually disappears after the joints have been loosened up.

RELIEF MEASURES
The treatment of degenerative changes in the joints includes general measures aimed at relieving the discomfort and improving the overall physical condition. Heat, bandaging, and other local measures are also used. Occupational strains should be eliminated whenever possible and posture should be corrected. Because so many people with osteoarthritis are overweight, reducing is often advisable.

People with osteoarthritis are rarely incapacitated and can usually move around though often with some discomfort. They do need frequent rest periods as this seems to relieve some of the stiff feeling.

Osteoarthritis is almost always a mild disorder which should be considered as an ailment rather than as a serious or dangerous disease. It does not cause serious crippling as some other forms of arthritis do.
