Today's Roundup

BECAUSE of the peculiar situation existing in Oregon official positions this year, all three members of the state board of control will be nominated at Friday's primary election. That throws the strongest emphasis on the extreme importance of this year's state elections, currently in the shadow of a vigorous presidential preference battle in the state.

The board of control, which has great responsibility in this state, consists of governor, secretary of state and treasurer. Two of its members, Governor Earl Snell and Secretary of State Robert Farrell, were killed in the Dog Lake plane accident last fall. The terms of each of them would have expired until January 1, 1951. The term of the third member, Treasurer Leslie Scott, regularly expires this year.

The vacancies created by the plane deaths were filled temporarily, until the next election. That is how it happens that all members of the board are to be chosen this year and that is why every earnest citizen of the state should give his best thought now to the selection of the highest-qualified men to the control positions.

Governorship

There seems to be no question that the two leading candidates for the governorship are Senator Douglas McKay of Salem and Governor John Hall of Portland. The other candidates, Glenn Ackerman of Multnomah county and John Peyton of Lane county, have not been able to move into the front stage of this contest.

Governor Hall enjoys the advantage of incumbency and the publicity that goes with it. Further, it should be said that he has made that publicity favorable by doing a good job in the position into which he was suddenly catapulted. He is intelligent and quick-witted.

On the unfavorable side is the question of Governor Hall's past legal associations with liquor and club interests, and his legislative record with respect to liquor and gambling issues. He seemed a little vindictive to us in some of his committee appointments after being elected speaker of the house last time. As governor he has done much to erase unfavorable aspects of his legislative record. People haven't been able to find much fault with what he has done as successor to the office of governor, though some may recall his legislative record with distaste. If elected in his own right, would he be like Governor Hall or Legislator Hall?

Senator McKay's record appeals more than Hall's to people who feel strongly on questions of public morals. He is a highly successful business man and a steady legislator, conservative and careful on fiscal policies. He is a little lacking in punch and color (Hall is no firebrand) and is not especially outstanding in the senate, but was dependable and hard-working.

It is doubtful if either Hall or McKay would have run for the governorship in 1950. They are running now only because the state's affairs took a swift change after last fall's airplane disaster. Republicans must choose between them after a campaign in which few issues have been raised and from which attention has been largely diverted by the presidential preference ruckus. Both men possess unquestioned good character and loyalty to the state.

On the democratic side, the candidate for governor is Lew Wallace, long a Multnomah county senator, democratic national committeeman, and hobbyist on game matters. Senator Wallace, has no opposition in the primaries; whether this fall he could break through the republican governorship succession line that has stood up since General Martin's term in the 'thirties seems to me a little doubtful.

But he is a veteran campaigner, he works hard at politics, has long been in state affairs, and he's the sure-fire democratic contender for gubernatorial honors this fall.

Secretaryship

For secretary of state, the republican contest is between Earl Newby, appointed by Governor Hall to fill the Farrell vacancy, and George Flagg. Flagg was long chief deputy secretary of state under Earl Snell, and then served as public utilities commissioner, resigning to run for the secretaryship nomination. Flagg is capable, thoroughly familiar with the office he seeks, definitely conversant with the major affairs of the state—all good qualifications for a board of control member.

He has an uphill fight, however, to beat Secretary of State Newby, at least in this area, where Newby is much better known.

These Days

Really great presidents seek to preserve orderly government within the constitutional framework. Ours is a peculiar type of government, doctrinaire in many respects, particularly in the division of powers among the executive, the legislative and the judicial. The theory is that by means of this division of powers, tyranny becomes impossible. A process of checks and balances was instituted in the hope that no one man or one part of the government would act willfully, in opposition to the rights and interest of the people.

The extreme new dealers have regarded this form of government as confusing and expensive. Their objective has been a concentration of power in the executive, congress becoming a "rubber stamp" and the courts, instruments of the presidential will. The "rubber stamp" congress, in theory, would be closer to the British parliament than to traditional American representative government. The president would, in effect, control the congress as the prime minister controls parliament.

The fallacy in all this is that whereas the members of the British parliament represent a political party in the house of commons and each man only himself in the house of lords, a member of the American senate represents the sovereign state which chooses him and a member of the house of representatives is the representative of the whole of a particular constituency irrespective of party. The British parliamentary system makes the government, in both its legislative and executive functions, the activity of a majority party. The judiciary is separate, permanent, and non-political. In the United States, the political party is not much more than a vehicle for the election of officials; in office, each official functions individually. Thus, when votes are counted in either the senate or the house of representatives, it is not unusual to find members of either party on the opposite side of the party's leadership.

Mr. Truman assumes, for the executive, an authority which is British rather than American. He regards the republican congress as a personal opposition and he fights it politically. Congress has shown unusual forbearance in its treatment of the executive. For instance, Averell Harriman, on orders of the president, declined to give a congressional committee information which it rightly desired in pursuit of its legislative business. The speaker of the house could have sent a sergeant-at-arms to arrest Mr. Harriman, bring him before the house, give him an opportunity to purge himself of contempt, and if not to keep him under arrest until he did purge himself. It is not necessary for the house to go through any judicial branch of the government.

Or, it could have taken a milder step. When Mr. Harriman's name came before the senate for confirmation as ambassador associated with ERP, the senate could have, and in my opinion should have, refused to confirm him on the ground that he had been contemptuous of congress and therefore is unworthy of its confirmation. The constitution clearly gives the senate this power.

Important

The candidates for positions on the state board of control are Hall, McKay, Ackerman, Peyton, Wallace, Newby, Flagg, Carney, Silverman, Bean, Unander, Belton and Slack.

Voters, in making their choices, will want to think about the importance of this board, which has full authority and direction over all the state's institutions, handles the budget for most state boards, commissions and institutions, and has many other important functions. Familiarity with the state's business, sound business sense, and fidelity to high principle are requisites of the members of this board.

The Ashlander who now occupies the secretaryship likewise enjoys the advantage of incumbency and there has been no serious criticism of the manner in which he has handled the office since his fraternal contacts, and is a successful business man. He is friendly and attracts support.

Newby, a little like Hall, may suffer a bit among people who know something about the legislatures of recent years. There, he permitted himself to become associated with a faction that this department, for one, didn't admire. He always seemed out of place there; it was this association, perhaps, that led him to vote against Klamath's effort to divide the 17th senatorial district.

But this seems not to be affecting his candidacy in these parts. In a recent straw ballot among a young men's group he garnered all the votes. There is no question that Earl will strive to do a first-class job as secretary of state if elected to the office to which he was appointed. He is working hard at it now.

On the democratic side, it is Byron Carney against A. M. Silverman for secretary of state nomination. Not much has been said about this contest, perhaps because of a feeling that Flagg or Newby, whichever is nominated by the GOP, will be unbeatable in the fall.

The three treasurer candidates on the republican ticket are Senator Howard Belton of Clackamas county, Ormond Bean of Portland, and Slack Unander of Portland. This three-way situation between qualified candidates was discussed here the other day. On the democratic side, the candidate is Senator Walter Pearson, Portland, who is unopposed.

Political programs are more or less taking over KFLW's state for this evening, and two major net shows will take a back seat to aspiring politicians.

"Vox Pop," usually heard over LW at 6:30 will give way to "Men Behind the Melody," and a talk by Jack Linkenbach, one of the lineup of sheriff office candidates, and "Abbott and Costello," generally available at 8 p. m., will be replaced by a George Verlinges for sheriff talk and the Dewey for President club.

"The Lone Ranger" isn't being crowded out by anything so trivial as a political campaign, however, and will be heard as per usual over LW at 7 p. m., along with his albino friend, "Silver."

"Mayor of the Town" will retain its usual scheduling, also, and will come on at 7:30. He's apparently pretty sure of his office.

The Mayor becomes a connoisseur of the arts and a salesman of paintings tonight in order to help an elderly matron pay her debts. Seems that she starts a general rush among the women of the town on paintings and various works of art.

"I Remember Mama," the song whose title first appeared on the Broadway stage, then on the screen, and before both on a best selling book, will receive one of its infrequent radio renditions tonight on "Texaco Star Theatre," aired over LW at 9:30.

Evelyn Knight will do the warbling, and will share the show's spotlight with the troubadoring emcee, Gordon MacRae.

The gent with the Kremlin look up front is John Reed King, emcee of ABC's newest quiz program, "Go For The House."

King's contestants have the opportunity to win for themselves a completely furnished house and lot, which sounds like a real deal for any lucky contestant. Doesn't seem too much a guy can't win on one or another of the quiz programs these days, does it?

First skills of which there is any record were long, curved frames covered with leather, according to Encyclopedia Britannica.

HALL AND MCKAY
MERRILL, Ore.—(To The Editor)—In this contest for governor in the republican primary election, we have two very capable men, Governor Hall and Senator McKay. Governor Hall, having been attorney for liquor interest, and through his vote in the legislature, has been in favor of easing the laws in the regard to the sales of liquor. It is only fair to assume that under him this same law would not be very strictly enforced, while McKay has always supported the Knox law.

Senator McKay has expressed himself as favoring the retaining at least part of the income tax reserve for future needs. His argument is that it is merely a question of time until the receipt of the income tax money will be greatly lowered and in that case would throw too heavy a burden upon the owners of real property if the reserve the state treasury now has is allowed to be dissipated.

As I understand, Governor Hall's position, at the present time, is to use this money for any and every purpose. In a speech at the University of Oregon in Eugene a few months ago, Governor Hall made the statement at that time that the money was in the treasury and may be used practically for the asking.

I feel that we do not have to support the projects of Lane county, of which Eugene is the county seat, when they fought for many months the organization of a school at the marine barracks in Klamath county.

FOR CEMETARY TAX
KLAMATH FALLS, Ore.—(To The Editor)—I noticed with pleasure upon our return from a short trip that the city of Klamath Falls was advertising according to law the piling of a small tax measure on the ballot for the coming election for the purpose of maintaining the Linkville cemetery.

I hope this will receive the support of all our voters. There is nothing more sad than a neglected cemetery. This fact was recognized by both Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Moore who thoughtfully made provision in each of their wills for a bequest to be used for our Linkville cemetery. This old cemetery has a great history. Reading the names on the tombstones one really reads the story of the building of not alone our city, but of our county as well.

Bobt. Ermit who probably tried the first wheat raising, W. E. Arant, the first superintendent of Grater Lake national park; the Law boys, "killed by masked assassin" a story in itself; the large family plot containing G. W. Smith's family, whose store at Altamont was a landmark in the community. These are but a few of the names of those buried in our old Linkville cemetery. Let's show our appreciation of their work by voting for the small tax to maintain their resting place.

The World Today

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
AP Foreign Affairs Analyst

There is much virtue in the old saying that one shouldn't look a gift horse in the mouth but, like most generalities, there are exceptions to the rule.

We are faced with an important exception, or so it seems to me, in the case of Premier Stalin's announcement that Moscow is willing, if America is to accept open A. Wallace's recent open letter to him as the basis for peaceful settlement of Russo-American differences.

There is more than a little doubt as to what sort of steed we are being offered.

The big question we have to answer, of course, is whether this is a real peace offer or whether it is a shrewd move to bolster Russia's position and the red revolution for the spread of communism. It's a mighty uncomfortable thing to have to challenge what purports to be a peace gesture. However, we are forced to it by bolshevist aggression which has been going on unceasingly, with the resulting enslavement of numerous small nations and a threat to the rest of the world.

Does Moscow suddenly halt this program of 30 years' standing and say "We abandon our project. We are ready for peace?" I think not. What has Moscow in mind?

In U. S. Campaign

Well, one thing that political circles in this country were quick to note was that premier Stalin, with his praise of Mr. Wallace, had intervened in the American presidential campaign. It remained to be seen what the effect would be, whether Moscow might be raising the peace issue in order to weaken the Marshall plan for European rehabilitation, and block support for American military aid to the nations of Western Europe. Suspicions further give rise to the thought that Russia would like a lull in the cold war to give her a chance to consolidate her gains and bolster her economic position, especially heavy industry which would be needed if war overtook her.

Troop Withdrawal

One of the points Marshall Stalin cited as being mentioned by Mr. Wallace for discussion was "evacuation of troops from China and Korea." Well, now, such an agreement almost certainly would have the effect of giving Russia possession of all Korea which strategically is one of the most important bases in the whole Orient.

The northern half of Korea is occupied by Soviet troops, and the southern half by American forces. Russia has Sovietized the northern portion and has created a Korean army of some 200,000, while Southern Korea is just setting up its own free government under protection of America. Many observers figure that withdrawal of both Russian and U. S. troops would permit the Northern Korean army to take over the southern half of the country and incorporate it in the communist regime. No wonder Moscow wants withdrawal of American and Russian troops!

Most certainly we should pray for peace and work for peace, but meantime beware the silly season.

The Father Of Modern Israel Has Tough Fight

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK, (AP)—Many years ago a boy was born in Russia who had a great dream.

The boy was a Jew. His dream was that his long-wandering people again would come home to Palestine.

And into his dream the boy poured his whole long life. But the dream a man gives his life to rarely comes true in the way he wants it.

Nor did it for the boy—now Dr. Chaim Weizmann, professor, president of the world's newest state, Israel.

For his entire career was devoted to creating a homeland for the Jews without bloodshed. He thought they had known too much of bloodshed. But already less than a week after declaring their republic—their people are besieged, clashing with invading armies.

The dim of distant battle doesn't reach the ailing 73-year-old scientist as he lies in his hotel room here. But it must hurt his heart. He has always hated violence and terrorism, always fought for peace.

Many Talents

He is a strange genius of many talents—this elderly chemist, statesman and money raiser.

To the average American Dr. Weizmann is only a half-familiar figure. But for a generation his name has sounded like a bell to millions of oppressed Jews in many lands—a bell to freedom, a bell to guide them from the dirty ghetto and the fatal pogrom.

Born in Russia, educated in Germany, Chaim Weizmann became a teacher of biochemistry in Manchester and a British subject. As his renown spread in scientific circles so did his fame as an advocate of Zionism.

He never shouldered a gun but he played a big role in helping the allies win two world wars.

Well-known was the story of how Lloyd George, faced in 1916 with a critical shortage of acetone needed in the manufacture of explosive cordite, summoned Weizmann. Within a certain organism found in horse chestnuts, discovered a way to produce synthetic acetone in large quantities.

Asked what he wished in reward, he replied: "Something for my people."

Balfour Decision

This is reported to be the basis for the controversial Balfour declaration of 1917 which promised a homeland for the Jews in Palestine. But the declaration also said nothing would be done to "prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities" in the country, which then held ten Arabs for every Jew.

When Lord Balfour, British foreign secretary, asked if the Jews wouldn't take African Uganda as a compromise homeland, Weizmann lightly replied:

His companion, Pauline Clark, was swept completely under the ferry, but wasn't hurt.

The paddlewheel caught Rickman and thrashed him around and around until they stopped the boat and took him out, bruised, cut, shocked and dizzy. They took him to a hospital.

Balfour Decision

This is reported to be the basis for the controversial Balfour declaration of 1917 which promised a homeland for the Jews in Palestine. But the declaration also said nothing would be done to "prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities" in the country, which then held ten Arabs for every Jew.

When Lord Balfour, British foreign secretary, asked if the Jews wouldn't take African Uganda as a compromise homeland, Weizmann lightly replied:

Rev. Brown To Quit Post

Rev. Cecil C. Brown, for 13 years pastor of the First Baptist church, has submitted his resignation effective July 1. Rev. Brown plans to enter general field and missionary work.

Rev. and Mrs. Brown will leave soon after the July date, but their headquarters will remain for a time in Klamath Falls.

Their son, Ronnie, will remain in Klamath Falls after graduation from Klamath Union high school until next fall when he will enter San Jose State college.

The First Baptist church committee is considering possible successors to Rev. Brown, but no one has yet been selected.
