

Study Of Early Man To Be Made In Two Alaska Sites

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, June 8 (AP)—More evidence to support the theory that the first human life on the North American continent crossed over from Asia by way of Bering Strait will be sought along the Bering Sea coast this summer.

Doctor Hodge Larsen of the Danish national museum at Copenhagen announced Monday that he plans an expedition to seek connecting cultural links between the ancient Eskimo ruins at Point Hope north of Nome and Dutch Harbor in the Aleutian islands.

Larsen is in Fairbanks with Doctor Erik Holtved, an expert on the languages of the Greenland Eskimos.

Working with Professor Louis Giddings, University of Alaska anthropologist, they plan digging parties near Dillingham on Bristol bay, on Norton sound and in an area from the mouth of the Yukon river to the village of Unalakleet.

Larsen earlier dug at the ancient Eskimo settlement of Ipiutak near Point Hope, whose excavations add credence to the belief that the earliest residents of North America came from Asia.

Later Larsen discovered the remains of a similar extinct culture near Dutch Harbor 1200 airline miles southwest of Point Hope.

The newest expedition plans to search for traces of other settlements of the same era along the coastline between Point Hope and Dutch Harbor.

In hopes of linking the Alaskan Eskimo with the Greenland natives, Doctor Holtved will make wire recordings of folktales and music of the Alaskans.

Fruit Trees To Be Counted

OLYMPIA, June 8 (AP)—Washington's fruit trees and grape plantings are going to be counted and classified.

Fred Martin, state director of agriculture, announced Monday that $20,000 will be spent on the survey and inventory during the year ending July 1, 1949.

The federal government will furnish $10,000 through the research and marketing administration and the state government will put up an equal amount from matching funds authorized by the last legislature, Martin explained.

He said the project will be handled through the Seattle office of the federal bureau of economics in cooperation with the state department of agriculture.

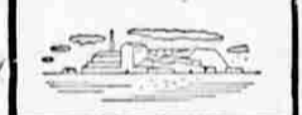

Martin said the number of trees, ages and varieties will be recorded on a permanent basis, enabling the fruit industry to forecast production trends as a basis for future marketing plans.
