

Poison Aids In Clearing Local Canals

Part of the program for keeping irrigation canals clear of debris includes periodic poisoning to kill the algae and moss.

Two hundred pound quantities of the poison are dumped into the canal at intervals. When the poisoning is to start, farmers are notified not to turn on irrigation water. The treatment is deadly to fish and frogs and turns an opaque blue with the foreign substance. Before the ditches are treated the water is reduced so that the solution will not be weakened.

with quantities of fresh water and farmers can use it again. Between the treating campaign against moss, the drag system is used, operating with two cats, one on either side of the ditch with a chain between, dragging through the canal gathering up the moss. After the irrigation season is over the maintenance crew works at replacing turnout gates, rebuilding bridges, digging out muskrats and mending banks.

Lariat Used To Fight Fire

HEPPNER, July 14 (AP)—The Heppner volunteer firemen fought a blaze with a lariat. Successfully, too. When a fire was reported in the George Davidson house, Fireman Cornell Green saw a large chair was the focus of the blaze. He uncoiled a lariat, lassoed the fire, and snaked it outside to be extinguished.

Flood Control Approval Asked

WASHINGTON, July 14 (AP)—Army engineers and congressmen Wednesday urged senate approval of harbor improvement and flood control projects in Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois and Washington. Army engineers also recommended construction of a mooring basin east of Iwaco, Wash., to aid the fishing industry along the Pacific Northwest coast.

Care Needed For Picnic

Picnic season can be stomach-ache season too! A few simple precautions can avert food poisoning from picnic basket contents, and the first of these as listed by the agricultural service is not to pack food that spoils easily. Among such foods are cream puffs, cream filling in pies and cakes, custards, cooked salad dressings, gelatin mixtures, stuffed peas or egg salads, all cooked meats, poultry and fish.
