Bright Stars In August Skies Interest Watchers

By J. HUGH PRUETT

Many inquiries lately have been received regarding two brilliant lights reported shining like little lanterns from opposite walls of the blue dome of the twilight skies. The one in the west seemingly has even brought apprehension to the minds of a few. A newspaper man recently climbed to the roof of a high office building to determine the reason for some excited telephone calls. But he could locate nothing, for the disturbing object had by that time silently slipped beneath the western skyline.

These evening brilliances are not terrestrial displays of aerial achievement, either hostile or friendly, but belong entirely in the realm of the celestial. Nor are they supernatural, for they obey natural laws perfectly. Their positions at any given hour tonight could have been calculated with precision 100 years ago by mathematical astronomers. What then are they? Our faithful ancient friends, the planets Venus and Jupiter, other worlds of our own solar system which every so often return to beautify our evening skies for several months.

These planets are by far the brightest of any of the star-like objects in the heavens. Venus, which can be sighted fairly low in the west within about half an hour after sunset, will continue to increase in luminosity during the rest of the year, and by late December will be 2 1/2 times more brilliant than now, a gorgeous Christmas star. One must look early for Venus for it sets about 1 1/2 hours after the sun.

Jupiter rises in the southeast at about the time of sunset, then moves westward always low in the sky. By 11 p.m. standard time (midnight DST) it is in the south, and four hours later, sets in the southwest.

August is the time when the mysterious band of the Milky Way shows at its best as it spans the evening sky from north to south. After the 15th the moon will not rise until late, then when twilight has faded from the heavens and the observer is away from bright city lights, this faint white glow of the galaxy is revealed. This is actually a vast collection of distant stars, so remote that they cannot be detected individually.

August is also the month for the Perseid meteors, known as the Tears of St. Lawrence. They are at their best from August 10 to 13, when 70 or 80 per hour may sometimes be detected providing the sky is dark, clear and moonless. But this year observing will be greatly hampered by bright moonlight all night during the time they are the most numerous. However, many of the brighter ones can be spotted by anyone with good vision who will constantly keep his eyes on the sky for a considerable period.

to the ladies!

San Francisco, Aug. 5.—This is about the hardest column I have ever had to write, what with my time so short and so much to tell you. The Gift Show was never more lavish than now. Not only would the Herald & News have to be a much larger paper to allow me to include all the details I would like, but our little shop at 519 Main would have to be a large department store to hold all the things I would like to send home to you. It is fun, though, selecting the very choicest buys and most irreplaceable gifts for you out of the most interesting selection on display.

The entire Civic auditorium is lined with booths of merchandise, several hotels have floors of giftware, and the great merchandise Mart is overflowing with tempting offerings. For our Chinese imports, I always go directly to the great importing houses on Grant avenue in fabulous Chinatown, where there is good food for the stomach as well as for the business.

I have thought of so many of you readers whom I know personally, and wished you could be with me to delight in the variety and fine quality of the merchandise here, but as soon as it can be shipped, (much of it comes from the East coast or abroad) you will all be invited to see many, many new things at truly reasonable prices, at Reinhardt, 519 Main, where you get S & H Green Stamps on all purchases and repairs.
