Wreckage Of B-29 Found On Mt. Hood

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 19 (AP)—Wreckage of an air force B-29 that disappeared four months ago with two colonels and a master sergeant aboard was found yesterday scattered over the southwest slope of Mount Hood.

The plane, deeply buried in snow at the base of a massive rock ledge 800 feet high, had been the object of one of the most intensive searches in this region's history.

Lt. Col. Jackson W. Lewis, commanding the 334 3d air force reserve training center said the forest service had made definite identification of the wreckage as from the missing B-29.

The bodies of the three men aboard—Air Force Col. Archibald Y. Smith, 49, San Francisco; Army Col. Walter W. Hodge, 45, San Francisco; and M/Sgt. H. E. Sluga, San Jose, Calif.—will be taken down the mountainside today, Lewis said.

The plane disappeared last April 21 after reporting that it was near Portland on its flight from Hamilton field, Calif. The officers were en route here in connection with unifying certain activities of the army and air force.

The wreckage was found at about the 8000-foot level on Mount Hood by Charles Colletti Jr., Timberline lodge employe, while on a hiking trip.
