Fur Coat Prices Headed For Drop As Raw Skin Costs, Profits Both Show Decline

WILD MINK—$1800 Less.

NUTRIA—$1000 Less.

OCELOT—$145 Less.

manufacturer contends that this fall's fur values match those of 1935, a year of low-cost furs, tax-free prices and stable dollars.

But 1949 fur coat values offer something which those of 1935 didn't, according to furriers. That something is much more material. One claims that as much as 40 per cent more skins go into the 1949 coat's sweeper skirt, taller collar, fuller sleeves, bigger cuffs, and sometimes giant-sized patch pockets.

This generous use of skins shows up this fall in many full-length coats with tall collars, enormous bell-shaped sleeves and wide flaring cuffs that add more fur to the extravagant display. One coat of choice wild mink, which makes such high-style use of extra skins, sells for $1800 less than it would have sold for last year, according to Deimbacher, its designer.

A full, boxy, high-collared swager of white unplucked nutria, which because it is unsharred, looks as shaggy as white mink and as soft and fluffy as ermine, sells for $300 less than it would have last year. It is designed by Esther Dorothy.

There's a less drastic cut in the price of coats of ocelot, which this fall must supply the demand for less-plentiful leopard. A 34-inch sweater of Esther Dorothy's design, with gold buttons, a lining of green wool and an upturned collar facing of the same, is $145 cheaper than it would have been last fall.
