

Douglas Speaks For US Support For Middle East

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 19 (AP)—The United States cannot afford to let the Middle East go the way China went.

That is the warning from Justice William O. Douglas of the U. S. supreme court, home from a six-week tour of Asia Minor.

The whole area can be saved, though, if this country will "throw its weight behind the honest and liberal forces" there, Douglas said in the first speech since his return.

"It is America's great mission to help such nations. No other bulwark against Soviet political expansion can be built," he told the biennial conference of the American Unitarian association here last night.

Douglas said he found Americans carried surprising influence in the Mid-East—and not dollar influence alone.

"America stands for something strong and good and idealistic not only in the capitals but in the villages. . . public men in this part of the world gain prestige and power when we give them respect and recognition," he said.

He quoted an Arab leader as saying, "The Arab needs America's counsel and encouragement even more than he needs American dollars."

Another told him, "Don't tell our people that they must choose between democracy and communism. The people of the Middle East are not free to make any choice at all. They are slaves. They are illiterate. They have no present escape from their misery," he said.

But America can offer an escape, Douglas continued. Encouragement, advice and recognition of a young, democratic leaders would do much, the jurist said.

"We must use our own ingenuity to invent ways to aid them so that politically they may become masters of their own fate."

"Disease, poverty and illiteracy as well as misgovernment have been the arch foes of mankind throughout all time. Last century they were local problems. Today when they ensnare the people of any one nation, they imperil the security of free men everywhere," Douglas said.

Silver Dome In Wocus To Be Rebuilt

The old Silver Dome site in Wocus, still bearing the ashes and charred remains of a fire that leveled the building, along with several newly built livestock pens, scales and auction sales equipment early on the morning of July 14 this year, is now being cleared of the debris in preparation to being rebuilt. Col. Fred Howard, owner, has already begun replacing the posts in the cement floors of the pens, as the first step towards erecting a complete new set-up. Two-inch planks will be used for partitioning the corals, which will be six in number, plus a reject pen.

A fireproof sales barn, built separate from the pens, and farther back on the premises, will make way for a more spacious parking lot. Large sliding doors, opening into a driveway down the center will facilitate the loading and unloading of sales articles. The floor will be of gravel, Howard stated, and will also be fireproof.

Proper drainage for the stock pens has already been installed and all building, wiring, etc., will meet state requirements for safety and sanitation.

Colonel Howard plans to have the project completed and ready for operation by July 1950.

Honesty Pays—But Very Little In This Instance

PORTLAND, Aug. 19 (AP)—Honesty may pay, but for 11-year-old Roger Westlund it hasn't come across yet.

Westlund, working as a busboy at Manning's cafe until college opens this fall, was clearing dirty dishes from the tables when he found a tobacco tin. He rolled up inside was $3400 in currency.

"For a minute I had myself half-way through college, and a car besides," grinned Roger. But then honesty outweighed dreams, and he turned the money in at the office.

A little later the distraught owner rushed in to look for his tin of money. He got it, and said he wanted to reward the finder.

The reward he gave Roger was $1.

Roger, a practical soul, said "I almost handed it back to him—but I kept it."

Flat Chest? Big Stomach? Got A Spare $900? Call Sam

DENVER, Aug. 19 (AP)—Ninety per cent of the customers who buy $300 suits are nuts, Tailor Sam Weintraub says.

Sam proclaims he makes "the most fashionable clothes in the world." Men who telephone their orders from New York, Chicago, San Francisco and other cities give support to his claim.

Sam's cheapest suit sells for $210 and some customers pay as much as $700 for a vicuna (fine wool) overcoat. The reason for his success, Sam told an interviewer, is this:

"You run into big money and the first thing you want to do is to be original. You don't want to be like everybody else anymore. So you don't just wear a wire suit. You wear Weintraub. They're nuts!"

In detail, Sam explained: "I got a customer, a lawyer, must make a fair salary. He gets divorced and now he comes to me for three suits. He's got a stomach, no chest and he's chasing after a girl in Chicago. All he wants to do is cover this thing here. Sam points at his stomach. He's nuts."

Sam says he wants his patrons "to look a certain way. Most men are big stomached, flat chested, disfigured. But we want our customers to look just so. We don't guarantee nothing—but style we give him."

If you're flat chested, big stomached or disfigured (and got 300 bucks) don't rush to the phone and expect Sam to take your order for a hand stitched suit. You need enough dough for three of them. That's the minimum order.

"I lose money on just one suit—no matter how much I charge," Sam said.

BOYLE'S COLUMN

This Gal From Texas Is Beautiful But Not Dumb

By ED CREAGH (For Hal Boyle)

NEW YORK, Aug. 18 (AP)—It sounds like a terrible thing to say about a girl—especially when she's an actress and as pretty as a tree-ripened peach.

But those rumors you've been hearing are true, and truth will out:

"This Faye Emerson Roosevelt is 'That?' Trout reads quotations and a Roosevelt dime at that.

In four appearances on a radio-television quiz show, the late president's daughter in-law has done more than stump the experts. She has outled them over. She has left them groggy.

"It is not fair that she should have so much beauty and so many brains, it," growled Gregory Taffoff, the movie director, in a Russian accent as thick as the sour cream on a cheese blintz.

Some of those present got the impression Ratoff wasn't entirely kidding. In her gentle, unassuming way Miss Emerson had just fielded a question which the man from Hollywood had booted all over the studio.

She has a habit of doing that.

In other appearances on the show—called "Who Said That?"—she out-experted H. V. Kallenborn, left Quentin Reynolds at the post, and built up a three-to-one margin over one Elliott Roosevelt—her husband.

"Men," says Quizmaster Robert Trout, "respect Miss Emerson and it's not just because she dresses up a television screen."

"Besides, if there's a joke being concocted in the vicinity she wants to be in on it. And I'm well aware that she'd love to turn the tables and ask me a question I couldn't answer."

As for Miss Emerson herself, the brown-eyed blonde from Beaumont, brighter than a shiny new dime, from the week's news and a panel of experts, or would-be experts, tries to name the well-known persons quoted.

See how'd you'd make out with these:

1. "I get bored in Hollywood—the big automobiles, the swimming pools, the rich houses."
2. "Nearly all the songs I hear these days are the loudest pile of trash I have ever listened to."
3. "I won't retire until my brains wear out."

Guest expert Emerson rattled them off in order: 1. Gregory Ratoff. 2. Frank Sinatra. 3. Connie Mack.

One of the experts who didn't recognize the Ratoff quote was Ratoff. He had a right to complain.

BIRTHDAY

NEW YORK, Aug. 19 (AP)—Mrs. Robert Jerome Faulkner, mother of society's cut-up Betty Henderson, celebrated her 87th birthday last night by dancing the Samba at the Stork club.

About 100 blue-book guests attended. The party was given by Mrs. Henderson, best remembered for her cigar-smoking at an opening night of the Metropolitan opera.
