

Furniture Buys For Wise Shoppers

Not so very long ago, we wouldn't have dreamed of using the same pieces of furniture in the living room or dining room that we used in the bedroom—the dresser with its large attached mirror was definitely a dresser and belonged only in the bedroom—and obviously one couldn't fill the center of the living room with a dining table large enough to seat a big family.

However, in recent years with improvement of furniture design and the development of dual-purpose or flexible basic pieces, there are chests, dresser bases, commodes, desk-chests and dining tables that are completely "at home" in any room you want to place them.

And, these are the designs which are made-to-order for the average young couple who is starting out in a one or two-room apartment—who want good furniture—and who undoubtedly, plan to eventually move to a large apartment or build their own home.

There are handsome double or single dresser bases in traditional or modern designs which are both decorative and functional in the one-room apartment, and later on, with the addition of a mirror are equally attractive in the bedroom, or as a buffet in the dining room.

Brand new, too, are the combination interlocking cabinet bases which are about as slick as anything we've seen in many a day. Beautifully styled in 19th Century design of mahogany, these bases are large in three different sizes—a large center chest, a smaller one, and an end section about the size of a commode. These chests may be used singly, in pairs, or in various combinations to suit your individual space and needs. All are equipped with concealed locks so that if they are used together to form one section, they are held securely together. Designed with two upper drawers and cupboard space below, they are equally smart in the living room, dining room, bedroom or entrance hall. The small end sections are perfect to use as lamp tables or in the bedroom as a night table. And, when space permits, they may all be used together to form a large buffet in the dining room. Another advantage of these pieces is that they are an open stock group which means that you can start with one and add the others whenever you wish to complete this course.

Then, of course, there are all the convertible type tables that may be folded up into console size while quarters are cramped and opened out to become a full-size dining table when the larger house has become a reality. All of these pieces are exceptionally wise investments because they are long-lived and not one of them will be discarded when the small apartment has become a thing of the past.
