THE DOCTOR SAYS

Shock Treatment Working

DENVER, Sept. 8 (AP)—When you try to remember something, little spurts of electricity from your brain run along the flesh of your temples. They emerge through your skull.

The discovery of this electrical force in memory was reported to the American Psychological Association yesterday by doctors John L. Kennedy and Robert M. Gottlander of Tufts college, Medford, Mass.

This discovery fits exactly with findings of brain surgeons that memory is electrical. The surgeons, during operations that exposed the brain, caused patients to remember things long forgotten. This they did by touching the grey matter with a slight electrical current.

The Tufts psychologists find that the electrical spurts that come out through your skull, rise from the very same brain sections where the surgeons found the seat of memory. This seat is the temporal lobes, two sections of grey matter, one on each side of the head.

The electrical memory tabs reported by Dr. Kennedy are a new type of brain waves. Such waves are slight electrical surges which are picked up by pasting metal discs, or electrodes on the scalp, and amplifying the electrical current they pick up.

To get the memory waves the electrodes are fastened in front of the top corner of each ear. These new waves are traced by a pen on moving paper, where they form little spirals, lying in a horizontal position. There are eight to twelve of them a second.

They don't appear all the time.
