There are many facets to the back-to-school scene—the freshly laundered children with neat pigtail braids, shining new shoes, and the smooth levis. But while the children are heading back to school after summer vacation so are the teachers and the parents.

Back-to-school activities begin early for the teachers and for many they never stop, since teachers during the summer time often are busy becoming students once more at many of the colleges; then they rush back to participate in the teachers in service school program before school officially opens.

While for mother and dad summer is not quite a vacation with exuberant youngsters to watch, back to school brings the PTA, Friday night children's parties and numerous school functions to attend.
