

New Winter Wheats OK'd In Try-Outs

FULLMAN Wash. Sept. 28 (AP)—Washington State college yesterday released two new winter wheat varieties designed to escape smut damage lodging and winterkill.

Both are high-yielding wheats the college said. Both have passed milling and baking tests. Both are adapted to growing conditions in Washington Idaho and Oregon.

Dr. Mark T. Buchanan head of agricultural research at WSC said the new short-strawed soft white winter wheats have been named Elmer and Brevor.

They were developed by Dr. S. P. Swenson dean of the college of agriculture and Orville A. Vogel department of agriculture agronomist here.

Good Anti-Smut

Elmer wheat particularly will be useful in the Northwest's anti-smut campaign Buchanan said. It is resistant to dwarf smut which has been particularly bad in the area for the last two seasons and to about half of the other known races of smut.

Brevor has moderate to high resistance to all the known smut races.

Both new varieties outyield present varieties 10 to 15 per cent Buchanan said.

Elmer is a white club wheat and Brevor is a common white. Because of their short straw they are resistant to lodging. Both stand up well under severe winter conditions.

Passed Tests

Robert Fletcher Walla Walla field secretary of the Pacific Northwest Crop Improvement association wired college officials that the varieties had passed commercial scale milling and baking tests.

Northwest farmers won't get seed for the new varieties until 1950. Supplies of pure seed now on hand will go to certified seed growers who will raise enough seed for distribution through the state crop improvement association.

Fifty bushels of each will go to both the Oregon and Idaho experiment stations.

Roomer Wanted But No Bull

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 29 (AP)—A 1300-pound bull broke from a truck here, leaped two blocks down Market street and bolted into a bedroom at the home of Mrs. Leonard Ashcraft.

Mrs. Ashcraft said she had up a "room for rent" sign but had no idea she would receive that sort of response. The bull climbed up on the bed and refused to budge for several minutes.

Finally, police shot the animal. "I wanted to rent that room," Mrs. Ashcraft said, "but a bull's too reckless."

TUMBLER—Three-year-old Bruce Jacobson of Kansas City, shown in a hospital crib, might be a tumbler when he grows up. He made a successful but accidental start when he tumbled off a chair, fell through a third story window, bounced off an electric wire and hit the ground 35 feet below. He was only bruised slightly but his parents took him to a hospital for observation.
