On the Road

By DEB ADDISON

-HE drive to Eugene and Portland is at its best right now—from a scenic standpoint and from a roadbed standpoint. On this side of the hump the aspens are turning; many of them with each aspens are turning; many of them with each ividual leaf fluttering in full fall yellows and reds. As you start down the west

you drop down into the valleys the foliage still is green, but it's a riot in the high country from here nearly to Oakridge. NCIDENTALLY, playing a little private travel game, it took us from Modoc point to somewhere past Junction City to find a man working in the fields. Its amazing how far you can travel without seeing anyone tilling the fields, once you leave the Klamath basin.

We've driven from here to Portland, seeing only one person working in the fields toutside of basin) but never have made a clear sweep of it. On this jaunt there were several farmers working small tractors pulling small disc harrows between Junction City and Portland.

No wonder they call it Easy Valley on the other No wonder sades, side of the Cascades, UCH of the Willamette highway now is over new grades in the Meridian Dam-Pleasant Hill district. It's great to get off the winding, dipping, narrow old road along there.

Also much of the resurfacing has been completed along the Oakridge part of the road. It's a beautiful piece of road surface to roll over now. Here's hoping it holds up better over the winter than previous

HE drive from here to Eugene is enjoyable from the time you hit the Pacific highway-no. The tony" of the long straightaways in the open country is fine. Dust and high centers on the by-ways presents no problem. But when you get into the congested traffic that exists all along the Willamette valley, then I'll let somebody else drive. That brings up the question, why not continue on north through Bend. The answer is that you want to stop in Eugene. A straight line is of consequence only as it exists between two points. That's why 97 never will carry the traffic of the Pacific highway (thank goodness). There are more people in Easy Valley, and so there's more travel over there-between two "over

These Days

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

RTHUR GARFIELD HAYS, the lawyer, makes a point which needs interpretation. He asks: . . , what is the truth? What is heresy? Who is the judge? Are men to be judged not by what they teach but by their political views and associations? What is a communist? A member of the party or only an admitted member of the party? Or is the test a belief in communism? Where does a fellow traveler stand? Or a liberal? Or a New Dealer?

"The implications and consequences which follow from judging men not by their acts but by their views are far more dangerous to democracy and freedom than the communists themselves."

Hay's difficulty is, of course, that he is uncertain about what he calls "the truth." Having no fixed standards, living intellectually in a grey, uncertain world, as do many these days, he can favor that which he opposes. For Arthur Garfield Hays is no communist or even a Marxist; he is what may be called a liberal which means that his own mind has never been made up with finality. It is a happy state for those who practice a passionless objectivity and who really avoid responsibility. In my judgment, the communists or even the Ku Klux Klan are preferable, for one can know where they stand and act accordingly.

AYS objects to our eliminating communists as teachers of our children in the public schools on the ground that freedom is more important than the souls of the young. He does not say it in that way. He rather argues:

"This drive is not only against teachers who are party members. The Peinberg law in New York state makes loyalty the test. A teacher's loyalty is judged not by the courts but by boards before which the attorney general's blacklist (promulgated without hearings) is good evidence. I have always thought that fascism was a system which was run by the executive without regard to the legislature and judicial. Here we have the executive stamping citizens as suspects. Discrimination by the govern-ment among American citizens, who have violated no law, is not my idea of democracy! Of course, this isn't fascism, but it is fascist procedure"

LL of which is beside the poine. Parents have A a moral right to decide on the character and competence of those who teach their children. The taxpayer has a legal right to protect the expenditure of public funds against abuse. The voter has a responsibility to select members of the legislature who will vote for measures which he, the citizen, assumes will best serve his interests, protect his rights, and provide for the general welfare.

No one can deprive the parent of the right to protect his child even against the power of the state. That is inherent in parenthood, when a parent insists that a child is being corrupted by a teacher, the parent should protest to the school authorities and exert every available means to defend his child. As communism is, from the American standpoint, an immoral doctrine, the teaching of comunism in our public schools is an impairment of the morals of minors and should be so regarded.

HE question might be asked, how can a communist teacher advocate Marxism or support Russian policy if he does not teach that subject? The error in the question is that Marxism is only a political or economic movement. Actually, it is a osophy of life based upon man's relation 'ip to the cosmos, assuming that man is a material creature, totally conditioned by his environment. Such a philosophic system, translated into the simplest terms, can be taught from the kindergarten up to courses for a Ph. D. and is so taught throughout our country.

The Russian phase of this problem, while philosophically secondary, is of vital importance to the continued existence of the United States. For what the Marxists do is to debunk the United States, to minimize its achievements and importance, to ridicule by word, gesture and innuendo its institutions. The child assumes that the teacher knowsand in that assumption is our danger. Those who are impelled to influence our children to hate our country have no place in our educational systemcertainly not out of public funds.

------British Prime Minister Attlee's decision not to be stampeded into a general election because of the economic crisis is being halled by objective observers as daring-and perhaps smart. It is particularly daring in that the fate of socialism itself in Brit-sin is at stake.

The present government still has more than eight months to run if it is to fulfill its normal life of tive years. That would mean a general election next July, and Attlee apparen-ly is determined to stand his ground until close to the finish. Political ex-perts predict that the election is likely to come in May or June.

In making his decision the prime minister was faced with weighty considerations. The effect of the recent devaluation of the pound ster-ling still remains to be seen. It is the government's theory that ui-timately it will ease the crists, but indications are that the transformaliving and a lowering of Kids wages.
