A new list of students to attend the Oregon High School Press association conference in Eugene this Saturday has been assembled, since it was learned that yearbook staff members in addition to school newspaper writers were invited to the one-day confab.

It seems pleasant, but also unusual to ride up the Wall street hill leading to the school in a smooth manner. Ever since last winter's snow and ice left the once-level pavement in a mass of stones and ruts of interminable depth, one braced himself before attempting the ascent in a car, but since last Friday, when the street was opened, things have been different.

Next Year's Eggs Should Be Cheaper WASHINGTON, Oct. 18 (AP)—Consumers may get their 1950 supply of eggs at prices averaging around 10 cents a dozen cheaper than this year.

Such a price reduction would be possible if the agriculture department decides to carry out tentative plans to lower price guarantees to poultrymen. Top-quality eggs are selling for as much as 80 cents a dozen retail in some areas, officials said.

Parity The department is required by law to support producer prices at 75 per cent of parity until January 1. Parity is a price standard set by law designed to be equally fair to farmers and those who buy his products.

But the department may lower the support to 75 per cent of parity after the first of the year.

Poultrymen have been producing about five per cent more eggs than consumers will buy at the 90 per cent support guarantee. The extra supply is being bought by the government in the form of dried eggs.

The government had had little luck in attempts to dispose of the dried eggs abroad.

Big Loss The government expects to take an eventual loss of perhaps $85,000,000 on stocks of dried eggs acquired last year and this in carrying out supplies programs. Such a loss could reflect sale of the eggs abroad at prices below what the government paid.

The government has acquired about 203,000,000 dozen eggs.

New Methods to Prevent Water Pollution Developed

SEATTLE, Oct. 18 (AP)—The "next four years" will find new methods developed for treatment of industrial wastes to prevent water pollution.

That was the prediction yesterday of Richard G. Tyler, professor of sanitary engineering in the University of Washington's civil engineering department.

Cheap, Good Tyler said the research now is directed toward finding methods which are both economical and efficient.

"We've run into a real problem in the treatment of metal wastes," he said. "We can make it sink to the bottom, but our processes are too expensive."

Another tough program is that of sulfite liquor, a waste product from pulp mills and the top killer of marine life. Tyler said the average size pulp plant has about the same pollution problem as a city the size of Seattle.

Industry Aids The pulp industry is spending about $50,000 a year at the university in pollution research. In addition, the school recently received a $2000 grant from the pollution control commission to study fruit canneries, brewery and metal pollution problems.

"We're finding new uses for these waste materials," Tyler commented.

ed. "Some of them can be used for stock feed and fertilizers."
