

This Week Twentieth Anniversary of Stock Crash, Big Depression

By WILLIAM D. HORGAN
NEW YORK, Oct. 25 (AP) — Twenty years ago this week the stock market crashed in a tragic ending to an era of prosperity.

The Coolidge bull market died a violent death that shocked and stunned the nation and financial capitals throughout the world.

There is no standard by which to measure the selling panic which swept into Wall street in cat-like silence and ripped the financial district wide open.

Described in generalities, the market value of the nation's productive machinery plunged, in a matter of minutes, by billions of dollars. The decline lasted for three long heart-breaking years.

Yardstick
In human terms the losses could be measured in dollars and cents; in the bankruptcy record, the destruction of lifetime savings, in shop tickets. It could be measured, too, in the desperate, haggard faces of the new poor.

Delusion
Everybody knew the market was going up and up. There were a few people who disagreed, but they were viewed with the same suspicion as an ardent supporter of the communist party is today.

Hint
The first intimations that something was wrong came in the week which ended October 19, 1929. That was a bad week for the market — but not too bad. The bull market had paused before. It was nothing serious.

Watchdog
The securities and exchange commission, created by congress, is the watchdog of the securities market.

business. The SEC has a keen eye and a long probing finger. It is respected as well as feared. For a long while it was hated.

Elk Takes Over From Herd Bull

PORT ANGELES, Oct. 25 (AP) — Things are getting back to normal at the Hugh Govan farm today.

About five weeks ago a big bull elk wandered out of the woods and joined Govan's beef cattle herd in a field adjoining the well-traveled Olympic highway 15 miles east of here.

Muscles In
While passersby gawped and ran for their cameras, the loudly elk patrolled the herd, gradually reducing the herd bull to the status of an errand boy.

Understatement
The city's big bankers got together, finally emerged with an announcement which certainly was a masterpiece of understatement.

As word of the elk's presence spread, some days would find as many as a hundred cars at a time lined up along the fences to view the animal.

Yesterday morning he gored
a cow and almost killed two new purchased calves. That was enough for Govan. With permission of the state

Author Says Book Dictated By Ancient Atlantis Priest

LONDON, Oct. 25 (AP)—British author Frances Dale did the typing, but she insisted yesterday that her last book really was written by a priest who has been dead thousands and thousands of years.

He lived, so said his ghost, on the continent of Atlantis which sank in the Atlantic ocean a long time ago.

So certain is the 40-year old writer that the book which fairly flew from her finger tips is none of her work that she told her astonished publisher that she will accept no royalties. Just a typist's fee is all she wants.

Too Deep
"I don't pretend to understand it," said Publisher Andrew Dakers.
