New Grass for Grazing

By DEB ADDISON

THE congress, before adjoining, passed legislation which can have an important bearing on our grazing and forest lands. Land in the Great Basin is largely held in public title. We all know how much of Klamath, Lake, Modoc and Siskiyou county is in grazing districts, Indian reservations, O&C and national forests, parks, monuments and the like. We know how important the handling of these lands is to our lumbering and livestock industries.

ADDISON

Quoting from a recent AP dispatch, "In three acts, congress provided for (1) an early completion of the forest survey, (2) authorized a general reseeding and reforesting program and (3) approved an expanded cooperative program with the states for fire fighting, range rehabilitation and tree planting. It authorized appropriations on a sliding scale up to $10,000,000 a year for reforestation and $3,000,000 for reseeding, by 1955. The limits now are $1,300,000 and $800,000.

* * * *

IT'S interesting to learn that steps are under way now on a reseeding job for the Lava Beds Monument. In the Captain Jack's Stronghold fire and the Sheep Wells fire about 20,000 of the Monument's 46,000 acres were burned over.

Ranger, Custodian, or What-ever-he-is Don Fisher of the Lava Beds Monument will leave Monday with Forester Emil Ernst for San Francisco to report to the director of this fourth region of the National Park Service on the feasibility of reseeding the burned over grazing land in the Monument.

Ernst came here a few days ago to make a study of the area with Fisher. The question is: what are the best grasses to seed, and what is the best method of seeding. Because of the rough terrain, it appears that seeding by air is the best method, Fisher believes. Now is the time to plant, to catch the fall and winter rains, and to get the seed on the ground and sprouted while rodents are in hibernation and the dickey birds are in the south.

* * * *

THE grazing land in the Monument is important as winter range both for sheep and for many of the Oregon-California migratory mule deer herds. Forest service people believe that between 4000 and 10,000 mule deer winter in the Lava Beds each year, and grazing permits are out for 2500 head of sheep.

The Lava Beds is one of the few national monuments or parks which permits sheep grazing. Reason: when the Lava Beds was taken over as a monument from the forest service grazing permits were in force, which the park service accepted. The sheep are ranged there in January and February, to get the woolies on green grass before early lambing.

The condition of, or lack of sufficient winter forage for the mule deer herds there long has been a subject of hot stove and of scientific controversy. If better grass stands are accomplished, both deer and sheep will prosper.

* * * *

A GREAT deal has been done in recent years in reseeding rangeland to better grasses, and in clearing sageland to make way for dryland forage. Lake county, under Lakeview Rotary club sponsorship, has done the most. Many a fisherman has thought he was lost on the Chewaucan when he found himself in the middle of a fine field of crested wheat grass instead of the former sagebrush flat. This fisherman was somewhat astounded to learn that there are a good many different kinds of bunchgrass. The common, fine-textured bunchgrass in the forests is fine forage for horses but cattle will pass it by unless fenced in to it.

MOST Oregonians were glad to learn that the Multnomah sheriff's choice had shrunk—Schrunk from the ample girth of Mike Elliott . . . and we might go on to remark that Community Chester Hamaker fills the bill . . . On learning that Klamath took Grants Pass, 39-21, as this is written, we also learn that H&N Reporter Hale Scarbrough, after losing a finn to News Editor Wally Myers on the Medford game, talked Wally into taking Klamath over GP—to get even . . . The Denton-Godard-Bramlett-Ustick crew here can be proud of the press work on the three-color ad for Harwin's Friday. But don't take it too seriously, boys, you're hard enough to get along with now . . . Will someone please tell "Si" Orr (telephone 8357) how to get ducats to the New Year's Shrine game in SF. I can't.

These Days

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

SOME years ago, I wrote a piece announcing the earth-shaking fact that I had not voted. Thereupon I received quite a large and critical mail denouncing me for my failure as a citizen. The critics were correct. The highest duty of a citizen in a free country is to participate in his right to choose his own government. Whoever fails in that obligation, fails his country.

And yet, in that year, I had no one to vote for. The politicians handed the citizens slates of incompetent and in some respects worthless men. I could not conscientiously make a choice. This year, I am faced with a similar dilemma. In New York City, where I vote, an election is being held for a U. S. senator and for municipal officials. The candidates for the U. S. senate are John Foster Dulles and Herbert Lehman. The choice is easy. I shall vote for John Foster Dulles, the abler and more fit candidate.

* * * *

WHEN it comes to the municipal officials, the choice is very difficult. The democratic candidate for mayor, Bill O'Dwyer, is the present incumbent. Robert Moses, whom I regard as the greatest and most independent authority on municipal government in the United States, himself a republican, is supporting O'Dwyer. That makes a great impression on me, for Moses would not subordinate his sense of right for political advantage. He is not that kind of a man.

Furthermore, the campaign against O'Dwyer is being focussed on the fact that gambling exists in New York. That I cannot take seriously. In a city of 8,000,000 human beings there will be gambling. In fact, I have some bets outstanding on this and that—all as much a gamble as anything else. It is true that the streets of New York are dirty and I wonder why they cannot be kept clean. And I think the city school system inadequate, but it comes down to how much money there is to go around. Yet, I cannot vote for O'Dwyer.

Newbold Morris, the contender for the mayoralty, is a republican, but he cannot appeal to my party loyalty, as he has none. I have known him for 15 years, like him as a man, envy him his figure, but not his mind. He possesses charm of personality, but, in my judgment, lacks intellectual stability. He calls himself a republican, but is part of the apparatus of the liberal party and the A.D.A., which are socialist groups. Can a man simultaneously be a capitalist and a socialist?

At any rate, I cannot vote for him for public office and shall not.

Both these men are opposed by Vito Marcantonio, who is Stalin's choice for mayor of New York. That lets him out.

* * * *

NOW, here is a dilemma. There are only three candidates and I must make a choice. But I find it difficult to make the choice. I could write in some name and assuage my conscience that way. Every year, people write in Admiral Dewey, Babe Ruth, Eleanor Roosevelt and Little Abner. My sense of humor does not carry me that far.

Voting is a serious business. This is one of the few last countries where the people enjoy the right to choose their own government at a free, secret, general election. That right can only be preserved by its exercise. The system of nominating candidates is wrong but practical. There is no choice in making the nominations. It is done by a small handful of politicians. O'Dwyer and Marcantonio nominated themselves; Morris was nominated by David Dubinsky of the International Ladies' Garment Workers union and the republican county chiefs. The deal involved a discussion of the division of offices and who pays the expenses. Dubinsky's union pays most of them.

* * * *

SO, I have reached a conclusion. I shall go into the voting booth and I shall vote for John Foster Dulles for U. S. senator and I shall vote for Oren Root for borough president and no one else. By doing this, I shall accomplish two things:

1. I shall actively participate in the election, indicating my desire to make a choice but also my difficulties;

2. I shall indicate a protest against the politicians' choice. If the protest is large enough, they will take notice.

SIDE GLANCES

"I don't see why you have to take shells when you go hunting—you never hit anything!"

Boyle's Column

12-Year-Old Radio Starlet Too Sophisticated, Retired

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP)—After giving the best years of her life to radio, Peggy Bruder has to give up her microphone job because of old age.

"I don't feel too old to go on, but I guess they know best," she said mournfully.

Peggy is 12.

"An old woman," she said. "I realize that."

Hal Boyle

For three years Peggy has been a star panelist on WOR's network program, "Juvenile Jury." On the program five experts from four to twelve years hear the problems of other children and suggest how to solve them.

"What those five-year-olds come up with you wouldn't believe," said Peggy, a blue-eyed girl with long blonde curls.

"It gets to the point where the problems dont seem serious—only comical. And we try to make the audience laugh if we can think of a clever answer."

Key

And that is the key to her temporarily forced retirement. For a child trying to be clever is rarely as funny as a child who is spontaneous. Or as Jack Barry, program moderator, put it:

"We depend for laughs and pace on the off-the-cuff answers of the kids. At 12 a child begins to get a little sophisticated."

Sunday Peggy will make her final broadcast. After that she has nothing to look forward to but adolescence, high school, college, an acting career, matrimony, motherhood and children, middle age, grandmotherhood, some more old age—an then the final curtain. That's all there is left when you're already 12.

Miss Bruder, who is a star student in the 8th grade, isn't too dismayed at the road ahead.

'Wonderful'

"Radio really has been wonderful to me," she said, just to prove she held no hard feelings because the show must now go on without her. "It's taught me to face an audience and to ad lib. I no longer have stage fright.

"Now I want to go on and be a dramatic actress. I love it, and I've been studying for it. I think I'd rather be in the movies—every girl looks forward to that. But right now I believe television is the right thing to be in.

"Sometimes I do my homework watching television."

Her mother said, "Dear, we have to take life as it comes."

Heart Set

"Yes," said Peggy, smoothing her green frock, "but I know what I want. My heart is set on being an actress. I'll just settle down and be a wife"—she looked despondent at that dreary thought—"if I can't be an actress."

She won't face the future exactly penniless.

"I've been getting a $50 government bond each week," she said. "I put them all in the bank. I've got a pretty big bank account."

And then she said how much she would miss the excitement of her radio job.

It's awful to be old and sophisticated—all at once.

Doctor Says

Weather's Effect on Health

By EDWIN P. JORDAN, M. D.

Many people notice that there are changes in the way they feel when the weather turns stormy and damp hot and muggy, or clear and cool. A few have pains in their muscles or joints at times and claim that they can tell when a storm is coming. More susceptibility to colds or other infections in bad weather is a common complaint.

Extensive studies have been made on the relation between certain diseases and changes in the weather. Most human infections, particularly those of the breathing system and rheumatic types, seem to be much worse in the periods of heavy storms during winter and fall and they are least common in midsummer warmth.

In addition to the immediate effect of stormy weather, some differences have been reported between one climate and another so far as several diseases are concerned. This may be connected with the difference in storminess or variations in temperature and barometric pressure between one region and another. Some of those who have studied the question have even gone so far as to say that almost all diseases are greatly affected by these differences.

For Better Breathing

People with chronic infections of their breathing apparatus or those who are unusually susceptible to acute infections do seem to do better in the southwestern part of the United States, where major storm changes occur far less frequently than in most other parts of the country. The benefit which they can obtain is probably greatest in the winter and spring when storm conditions are at their worst in the northern and eastern sections of the country.

Not all doctors are agreed on the direct relation of climate or weather to health and infection, but there does seem to be a relation, at least in some people.

The Doctor Answers

QUESTION: Would you please discuss cancer of the throat and tuberculosis of the throat?

ANSWER: These are big subjects and both conditions are so comparatively rare that it hardly seems justified to discuss them in a full column.

The World Today

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
AP Foreign Affairs Analyst

Britain's socialist government, having received a vote of confidence from its big majority in the house of commons, is free to continue its struggle with the economic crisis which is tearing at the vitals of the nation.

That affords some moral encouragement to the harassed cabinet, but it cannot provide the material aid or even the advice so grievously needed. It is merely a friendly gesture at the zero hour as the government goes into fresh action against strange hazards.

Mackenzie

One of the hopeful aspects of this grim situation is that the government has no delusions about the gravity of the situation. It is well aware that the country is in the midst of an economic life-and-death struggle.

All of which is by the way of saying that no man can foresee the extent of crisis, or the remedies necessary to its cure. It's likely to be a protracted operation. Recognition of these facts constituted the main value of the two-day debate in commons, or so it seems to me.

Straight Talk

Sir Stafford Cripps, chancellor of the exchequer, was near to tears as he hammered home to a tense commons that "our civilization itself must fade and wither away" unless the nation produces more goods immediately and sells them to America. Cripps isn't given to exaggeration and he is not of the emotional type. He meant what he said.

Britain is scraping the bottom of the economic barrel. Her immediate resources have been largely depleted. She hasn't the wherewithal for a quick recovery. That is why Sir Stafford warned the country that it couldn't exist on the charity of the United States. Said he:

"At the root of our success or failure lies our own capacity to produce. The only real solution for our difficulties is more and more economical and efficient production."

Drag

One drag on Britain's recovery rests in the fact that much of the rest of Europe also is hard hit. Numerous countries are just about living on the Marshall Plan which is slated to expire in 1952.

In addition to increasing production the government is taking other measures to conserve resources. The budget is to be slashed $784,000,000, and another $400,000,000 is to be cut off dollar imports. Loans and credits to other countries are to be restricted.

The government also will make it difficult for people to sell in the so-called sterling area, thus forcing them to sell in the dollar area to glean the dollars, which are needed badly for the purchase of supplies in the United States.

Switch

In this connection it is noted that about 20 per cent of British exports have been going abroad against sterling credits. This operation is to be stopped so that these exports will go to the dollar area.

Present indications are that the government isn't going to let itself be stampeded into a general election but will carry on and try to secure an economic improvement before next summer when an election normally will be due.

In trying to figure what would happen if a general election were held now, some political experts confess themselves at a loss. They say that the independent voter, who will swing the balance, is confused and undecided because of the gravity of the economic crisis.

Therefore the calling of an immediate election would be gambling on an unknown quantity. Thus the government's present plan is to hang on and see if it can't improve conditions before asking the country to vote.

Imperfect Wife Gets A Divorce

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 29 (AP)—Mrs. Cecile Pines' marriage went up, one might say, in nonsmoke.

So the first thing she did on obtaining a divorce Thursday was to light a cigarette and take what she called her first carefree puff since March 9, 1948.

That's when she and Arthur Pines, 36, were wed in Las Vegas, Nev. After that, she testified, he "immediately forbade me to smoke freely and put me on a cigarette ration of six a day; if I smoked one more than my ration he would twist my arm until I dropped it."

It was all part of Pines' plan to make her the perfect wife, she said. She didnt want to be perfect. She got the divorce.

Art Association Inspects Exhibits at Local Gallery

By LORRAINE JOHNSON

The Klamath Art association had one of its most interesting meetings Wednesday evening in the exhibition gallery of The Art Center. There were many interesting forms of art on display, something to suit everyone's taste and individual talent. Everything exhibited was hand-made by a well known artist.

A preview of the ceramic exhibit of Franz and Marguerite Wildenhain was viewed by the group. This exhibit comes directly from the Museum of Modern Art in New York where it was considered the finest ceramic show in modern times. There are to be only three showings of this exhibit on the West Coast—Portland, Klamath Falls, and San Francisco. There is a comprehensive group of photographs on the studio wall which demonstrate the steps in pottery making. This exhibit will be in Klamath Falls until November.

Jewels

Another preview was seen of the work of Franz Bergman, internationally famous as a designer of jewelry. Most of the pieces shown were of hand-wrought silver set with semi-precious stones. His superb workmanship and design in this medium is considered the finest in the world. This jewelry exhibit will be open to the public for one month beginning on November the first.

There was an outstanding exhibit of photography by Catherine Brumbaugh of Klamath County and other Oregon scenery that was breathtakingly lovely and proved what a highly specialized art photography can be in the hands of an artist.

Water Colors

Mrs. Marie Harlan, of Lakeview, showed a group of the water-color paintings she made of Lake county landmarks and well-known ranches and ranch houses. She gave an interesting talk on her work and a description of the country which inspired it. Mrs. Harlan is a member of the Klamath Art association and has exhibited with the group.

Robert Brevek, assisted by Boyd Sprague Jr., showed some of the beautiful colored slides of Taliesin, the workshop of Frank Lloyd Wright, in Arizona and Wisconsin. These slides were made from photographs Brevik took during the two years that he was an apprentice at the Frank Lloyd Wright Architectural Workshop.

Stroh Canvases

The current exhibit in the gallery of the Art Center has created much comment from those who have already seen it. It presents the paintings of Earl Stroh who is now teaching at the University of Bolivia. This exhibit was loaned by the Galleria Escondida in Taos, New Mexico, and most of the paintings are water colors done in the Pampas country of South America.

Robert Banister introduced members of the drama, music and art classes of the Klamath Union high school and turned the remainder of the evening over to them.

Art Week

Gloria Newbill announced that plans were in the making for National Art Week from November 1 to November 5 inclusive. There will be paintings of Klamath artists on exhibit in all the store windows on Main street, open house in the art shops and studios, a sidewalk art show in the Parisian manner and activities in which the whole town can participate.

A musical program was heard in Catherine Blanas singing three charming songs accompanied by Ronnie Tarr. The girls sextette presented two selections and Ronnie Tarr played two piano selections.

Static

By DAVE UNDERHILL

It happens to the best of them. Last night Charlie McFarlan and Floyd Wynne broke out in a laugh at the way Charlie got tangled up in the news. In both their long terms at KFLW, when things were serious, these two have managed to go ahead, no matter what happened.

Dave Underhill

But last night, during the Home-town News', Charlie took an item off the teletipe and read it on the air before he had a chance to look it over. And when he came to a line that said, "Com-boys and farm-hands were LEARNING the TRICKS,' he stopped. That didn't make sense.

So he went back and said, "CLEARING THE TRACKS." Then he found that wasn't right either.

After stopping a moment, he took a good look and found that the thing should have read, "LEARNING THE TRICKS OF THE STEVEDORING TRADE."

Then it happened. Charlie looked at Floyd. Floyd looked at Charlie. Then they were off in a roar of laughter.

Oh well, it just goes to show that these two are only human after all.

How can a guy write a coherent column, when he's trying to listen at the same time to that spine-chilling Pel-Cavemen ball game.

Wow! It's spectacular.

A gross of orchids to the Pels for being the ball club that they are.

That 39-21 score is indicative of, or should I say, looks like a pro game score.

So now its on to the state championship, and victory for the Pels there.

Anyone doubt my word?

May we also, without stealing Walter Winchell's stuff, tend an orchid to JI for their fine handling of the game. The half-time interviews were in the professional vein.

And best of all, if you will pardon the slight gesture of pride was the description of pre-game and halftime activities by our City Ed., Lois Stewart.

Nice going, Lois.

A brief run down of Saturday and Sunday programs.

A strange mission on a stormy night and the sight of his friend, Thunder Martin, falling down hill, takes "The Lone Ranger" into a death trap that awaits Martin during "Mission by Proxy." LW, 8 p.m., Saturday.

Yak, Yak, Yak. Louella Parsons will guest-star Ethel Barrymore and her handsome nephew, John Barrymore Jr., son of the late illustrious actor, as the highlight of her Sunday night broadcast at 6:15.

This incidentally, follows fifteen minutes of yammering by W. W.

City brief for the night. Half of Klamath Falls was down in Grants Pass seeing the ball game. The other half was glued to their radios listening to the play-by-play account.

The streets sure were deserted.

U. S. Women Get Boost

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 29 (AP)—The sexiest women in the world, says Ella Raines after a tour of Europe and Africa, are right here in the USA.

The actress spent a year abroad with her husband, Maj. Robin Olds. Back to star with Vaughn Monroe in "Singing Guns," she told her observations of foreign women.

Contrary to the average U. S. male's opinion, she declared "French women don't emphasize sex in their dress. They look at the idea of sex differently: They don't try to dramatize it or hide it; they just accept sex as sex.

Underrated

"English women are badly underrated as far as sex goes.

"Nowhere in Europe do you see the wide use of falsies and other devices to play up sex, devices you find in wide use here in the United States. Lots of European women don't even wear brassieres."

The French bathing suit — which Ella herself likes and wears — is worn in Italy as well as France, she reported. She said the suit exemplifies the French woman's attitude toward sex:

"They either have it or they don't."
