Static
By DAVE UNDERHILL
Well, there was pandemonium on "Stop The Music" last night. You probably heard it all. But here's a recap of what happened.
Sidney Mollar, a baker in Brooklyn, New York, confirmed Walter Winchell's statement by calling the mystery tune right as "Chief Huk-kum."
Mollar was overjoyed, because the loot contained an engagement ring. At the time, "Stop The Music" called, his boy was out in search of a ring.
After the call to Brooklyn was completed, another mystery tune was played. And quicker than you could say "John Barley-corn" and chase it with "Aqua Velva," Steve Jayger, of Berkeley, Calif., called the new tune correctly as "Rustic Dance."
That's when the root really came off. It was the first time in the history of the fabulous give-away program, that such a thing had happened, two jackpots given away in one night.

But here is the payoff to the whole deal, and it concerns a local resident.
About thirty seconds before the new mystery tune was named Rustic Dance.
Well, no sooner had I hung up the phone, and Mr. Jayger names the tune, and pandemonium reigns on the news room.
About five minutes later, I get another call from Mrs. Hurd, rather out of breath, who tells me that the third mystery tune of the night is the verse portion of the old Negro spiritual, "O Dem Golden Slippers."
By this time I am ready to take her word for it, one hundred per cent.

But the clincher, neighbors, the clincher is this.
Not ten minutes later, Walter Winchell in his broadcast confirms Mrs. Hurd's second statement by saying, "The new mystery tune sounds like some sort of a ho-down. But actually it is one of the greatest Negro spirituals ever written.
There is one for Robert Ripley. Believe it or not!
