More About Parking Problems

By BILL JENKINS

YESTERDAY this column mentioned that two more parking spaces had gone to glory via the yellow line method. I was wrong. That should have been three more spaces. Found another one in front of the door when I went out. Oh, well, there's always lots of parking space 'way up of the hill.

It is interesting to note the reactions from various parts of the state to the general subject of the parking meters. I have a letter here from Dave Goldman, editor of the Portland Statesman, in regards to that subject. Dave says: "I note in the Sunday Journal of November 6 that they quote your newspaper, the Klamath Falls Herald and News, re the following matter: That Klamath Falls has some additional parking meters, and the motorists don't like 'em. Well, your community has our deep sympathy. We of East Portland don't like 'em either. As a matter of fact we are as the Journal stated, 'up in arms over the proposal to install them in East Portland.' Experience in having parking meters on Portland's West Side streets have proven that they do not solve the traffic problem, that they do injure business and that they are just another form of tax on small business."

So there are two sides to the question. Parking meters serve a purpose in any community, mainly that of raising extra funds. Whether or not they make more parking space is debatable. No one gadget, even the parking handbits, can be all bad. There has to be some good in them. But it can be carried to extremes, just as the yellow line craze can go overboard.

While I hate to see the parking spaces go in the latest instances, I'll have to admit that there is some justification, from a safety standpoint, in the ones on Pine. The one just off Esplanade I don't see the point of. Anyway, it's a nice open question and almost anyone can wax highly wroth on one side or the other of the issue. Gives us a substitute for the weather as a controversial topic.

Now that the Christmas season is nearing, I'm going to do a little literary lifting in hopes that it may ease the lives of some of the girls serving as clerks and to the harassed wives who suffer through their husband's Yuletide shopping. An article by Tom Mahoney in the November issue of Nation's Business lists these ten observations on masculine shopping traits: 1. He is a reluctant shopper but is inclined to quantity and sometimes reckless buying. 2. He is fearful of crowds, delay and embarrassment in shopping. 3. He is much easier to sell to than either his wife or his daughter. 4. He is more interested in quality than price but true bargains attract him. 5. He objects to monotony in merchandise but fears novelty and is conservative in his tastes. 6. He has definite ideas, or comes to quick decisions, about most items he purchases. 7. He buys without excessive handling or lessing of merchandise. 8. He is less inclined than a woman to return goods or to make unreasonable demands and complaints. 9. When convinced of the merit of brands and stores he is likely to be loyal to them for life. 10. He accounts for about 35 per cent of retail buying, more than twice what is popularly believed.

So there you have it. Makes the average male sound like a perfect little gentleman the moment he steps into a store, doesn't it? Maybe he is. So just remember, girls, if he seems a bit reckless he's probably just thinking of quantity buying. And, salesgirls, if he picks up an item, stop worrying. He probably won't break it.
