

USOs Return To Oregon Scene

By BILL JENKINS

CHANGING times often lead to forgotten memories. The USO is one of them for me, at least. Oregon now has one large USO in operation at Astoria, and another is contemplated for Portland. With the uniforms off the streets and the continual blare of publicity put out during the war gone we tend to forget things like that. But to the new recruits and the boys going through their two, three or four year enlistments it must play the same part. They have to have somewhere to go during their off hours, and you can't hang around the taverns and restaurants all the time. It's just one of the many little things that ought to be kept up. And it's also one of the many little things we do for our servicemen that Uncle Joe doesn't.

OREGON authors are becoming a large factor in the book business. Not only are there a lot of them considering the size of the area but they are prolific, prodigious writers. Not one book for any of them. They almost invariably ably turn out at least two and often more. Martha Ferguson McKeown (The Trail Led North) has just signed a contract (McMillan) for the second in that series, to be titled "Them Was The Days." This opus we are told will deal with the earlier adventures of her Uncle Mont Hawthorne's life. That period of Uncle Mont's youth from the ages of 7 to 16 to be exact. And right there is where I bog down. Authors, with Dall, of course, far in the lead, seem to be universally blessed with the faculty of total recall, or else know a lot of old-timers who are similarly gifted.

When I attempt to think back to the days of my youth I run into a total blank back of 1937. Maybe a vagrant thought here and there but nothing with any continuity or theme. In fact, I often have trouble recalling what I was doing last week, let alone ten or twelve or twenty years ago. The only conclusion I can reach is that I'm not cut out to be an author. They live on a rarefied zone far above my humble stand—and mind.

LABOR market news this week puts a somewhat brighter polish on the unemployment picture for the state of Oregon. While the total number of unemployed has jumped from month to month as winter closes in, the percentage of gain in unemployed is down over last year. The trend and not the actual figure is still the main thing in determining any long-range prognosis. Good weather and improving economic conditions are given as the reasons for the slow-down in the unemployment picture. Clear skies have left the lumber camps in operation and that makes a big dent in any labor picture. Looks like we are at least going into the win-

Veteran Gervais Mayor Dies

SALEM, Nov. 21 (AP)—Gus Jerome Moisan, 71, mayor of Gervais for 32 years, died in a hospital here yesterday.

He had served the city of Gervais for 42 years and took pride in the fact that he helped bring electricity and a water system to the community 10 miles north of here.

He had been bedfast for more than a year and retired from his job as mayor last January, saying it was time a younger man took over the responsibility.

The dodo, a defenseless clumsy bird found on Mauritius when the island was discovered early in the 16th century, was entirely exterminated by 1681, unable to cope with man's weapons or domesticated animals.
