Sunday Down on the Farm Ain't What it Used to Be

By FRANK TRIPP
Sunday on the farm is as changed as Sunday on Fifth Avenue.

These excursions once were universal Sunday diversions and were scheduled as precisely as the games of major league ball teams.

Except, of course, the Snyders had to stay home half of the Sundays to pay their debt to those who entertained them.

As soon as the Sunday morning chores were done the Snyder boys hitched Prince and Nance to the family's best conveyance.

Mom and Pop always rode in front and he drove. She'd take her gossamer and umbrella to be ready for showers and he'd throw in his oilskin.

I knew a black Republican farmer once who wouldn't have a democrat wagon on his place.

Every wagon had at least one good team, but seldom a fast one.

Of course the Flanagan had children, Flanagan always do. The Snyder kids and the Flanagan kids forthwith romped hand in hand across the fields to the pasture lot.

and more to do than city kids ever experience.

Pop Snyder and Mike Flanagan had a busy day. By night they'd tramped miles to view Mike's crops.

But it was in the house that things happened. Farm women always take it on the chin.

Alas how Sunday has changed down on the farm. Listen to this from the Dundee, N. Y. Observer:

My, my, my! These flying farmers once were the lads who took all day to get to the Flanagan and back.
