LUMBERING is a major industry in Lake county. 1—A stock of logs at a Lakeview mill testifies to this fact. 2—Cattle graze over country like this shown just west of town. 3—Gateway to Hart mountain is what the sign across the street says, and Lakeview really is. 4—The courthouse is a stately building standing in the middle of a green lawn and surrounded by trees. 5—The new home of Dr. Cleaver shows the trend of building on the North side. 6—Built before 1878, this is one of the oldest houses left in Lakeview. 7—A new housing unit is going up on the east side of the town to take care of the expanding population. 8—Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Schminck spend a lot of time in the museum they have built up in the basement of their home. Here they are shown with an early day phonograph. 9—Hunter's Hot Spring hotel boasts more than just hot water. It has a winter population of Canada geese as well. 10—The mayor talks it over. Carl Lange, left, tells the story to Klamath's Mayor Bob Thompson, right, as John Sandmeyer listens in. 11—Cowboy style boots on the feet of Vern Owens, Klamath Falls, get full approval from Lake county chamber prexy, Phil Quisenberry. 12—The judicial end of things was heavy for the trip. Here Lake Judges Combs and Heckman talk it over with Klamath County Judge U. E. Reeder. 13—A former KF man, Bob Howard, revives a few memories with visitors Ed Cowen and Red Whitcomb. 14—The social end was taken care of handsly by Mrs. Jess Faha in company with Arthur Rickbeil, Sid Elliot and Jess Faha.
