

UN Takes Up Question Of Russ Policy

LAKE SUCCESS, Nov. 28 (AP)—The United Nations takes up Nationalist China's charges against Russia today and renews its debate on international control of Jerusalem.

The United States expert on Chinese affairs, Ambassador-at-large Philip C. Jessup, is listed for an early explanation before the political committee (editor: convenes about 11 a. m. Eastern Standard Time) of the U.S. stand in the Chinese-Russian dispute.

The Nationalist delegation submitted a formal resolution late Saturday which charged Russia with consistently obstructing Nationalist China's control of Manchuria, and helping Chinese Communists. Russia thus violated U.N. charter provisions and a Chinese-Russian friendship treaty, the Chinese declared.

No Arms Aid
The resolution also asked U.N. members not to recognize any Russian-aided communist regime in China, or to give the communists military or other aid.

By its formal statement and by a general resolution reaffirming U. N. charter provisions on state sovereignty and peace, the United States position was expected beforehand to tie in with the state department policy expressed last August in a diplomatic "white paper" on China, edited by Jessup.

The white paper blamed the Nationalist government for most of China's ills but promised U.S. aid to the Chinese people when they were ready to overthrow the Chinese communists and their subservience to what the white paper and Secretary Dean Acheson's accompanying letter called "Soviet Russian imperialism."

Both Israel and Hashemite Jordan, which between them now control Jerusalem, have expressed opposition to U.N. control of the Holy City. Seventeen more speakers are listed in debate on the question in the special political committee.

Articles Give Sears' History

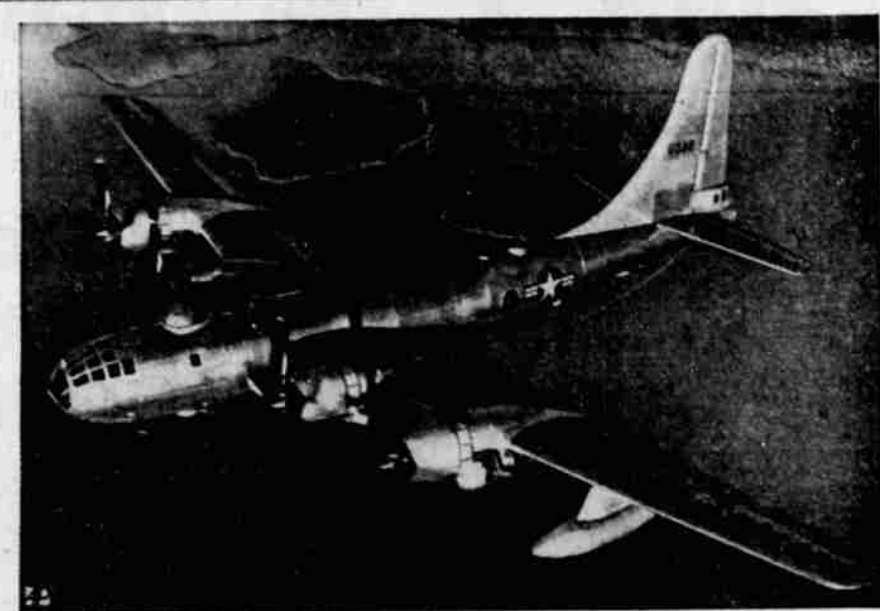

In a series of four feature stories to begin this week, Collier's magazine will explore the Sears, Roebuck and company organization from the "ground up." It was learned here today by Bill Knotts, manager of Sears store.

Author of the series, which is entitled "The Life and Times of Sears, Roebuck" is Francis Sill Wickware, well-known free lance writer. The series is scheduled to begin in the December 3 issue of this national weekly.

In preparing the series, which will run consecutively, the author spent some six weeks on research both in Chicago and Mexico City. The articles will trace the historical growth of the company from its beginnings in North Redwood, Minn., in 1886, up through its recent post-war expansion in the United States and Latin America.

Illinois Joins Klamath In Jail Sale Blunder; Crescent Mistake Nabbed in Time..!

By HALE SCARBROUGH
Klamath county is not alone in real estate blundering—a town in Illinois found out last week the lot upon which its city hall stands had been sold for taxes.

The town is Bradley, Ill. (pop. 4000), located just north of Kankakee.
The lot under the town hall got mixed inadvertently with a group of tax lien sales and was sold. The buyer of the lien now claims the very ground on which the Bradley city hall is located, but Bradley still has the city hall.

The pattern for such sales apparently was set right here in Klamath county.
A county-owned jail at Beatty was sold—by mistake, of course—over a year ago for $51.50 and the matter still hasn't been entirely straightened out.

The sale was of a vacant lot, but the jail building happened to be situated on it. Had been for 20 years.
Mrs. Ethel Casey of Beatty purchased the lot and the true nature of the transaction wasn't discovered until a couple of months ago when Mrs. Casey presented Klamath Agency a bill for 12 months' rental on her jail, at $30 a month.

The Beatty lockup over the years has primarily been used for detention of Indian reservation prisoners.
The county came within an ace of selling the Crescent jail on the same sort of deal but wised up to what was happening before the deed was presented to the prospective buyer. That buyer, incidentally, was reported to be intending to convert the Crescent cooler into—of all things—a cold storage locker.

BACK on the firing line for a little while today. The regular slot man went up to Portland for a meeting and I came down to fill in for him till his train came in. Then the city editor finally succumbed to a cold after fighting it off for weeks, so I moved into that spot for a while.

The only thing it points out to me is that a man can certainly forget a lot in a very short length of time. I found that I had forgotten how long a certain head was supposed to be, what the deadlines were, the line and em count for picture captions and a lot of other things that I used to have right at my fingertips. Hope I don't ever have to lay off a job for six months or I'll never be able to get any job done.

TALK about your old-fashioned falls in Klamath Falls. This one is practically a bit of summer as far as the Link river community is concerned. Saturday night we were invaded by a horde of midges, or stinging mosquitoes or something of that order that had all the aspects of the first spring hatch. They plastered the windows, crawled in through cracks around the screens and boomed into the house in teeming millions every time the door was opened. First time I ever had to use a bug-bomb in the middle of winter. Maybe they thought the clement weather was a touch of spring and just hatched out for the heck of it.

THE big Christmas opening is getting closer by the minute and people are already becoming keyed up waiting for it. The general attitude is one of saying, "Boy, it will sure make a difference to have the town lighted up and looking like Christmas instead of drab and bare like it was last year." I heartily agree with this sentiment. It will be swell. And a lot of thanks should go to the men who have given so graciously of their time and money and effort to make the whole thing come true.

BAD news for skiers comes from Crater lake this morning. It has been raining for the last five days up there and the snow is all gone. There is about one inch on the ground now, due to a spat of snow last night and this morning, but early this morning that was rapidly melting. It has been a long time since you have been able to see the ground at the lake this time of year.

FIREMEN TRAIN HOSES ON BURNING PLANE—Firemen move in closer to train hoses on burning fuselage of a cargo plane which crashed into a Detroit house during a landing approach at the city airport. Three persons were killed and three injured, one seriously.

The entire community was saddened this week when word was received that James Ottoman Sr. had passed away at a San Francisco hospital. Jim, who has been ill for several months, was hospitalized in Portland early this spring and in Klamath Falls for several weeks. Early this fall he was sent to San Francisco where he submitted to surgery and returned home after being hospitalized for some two months. For a while it was hoped that he would recover but about two weeks ago he returned to the hospital where he passed away November 17.

He was a native of Czechoslovakia having been born in Prague on June 7, 1889. He came to this country, with his family at the age of six and spent his early childhood in the East. The family is well known in the valley, having come to Malin some thirty years ago with a colony of Czechs who settled here. For the past fifteen years he has owned and operated the Malin Club. He was particularly interested in all civic affairs and has served for a number of terms on the city council. He was an active member of the Elks lodge and also a member of the ZCZJ lodge. The entire community extends its sympathy to the bereaved family.
