German Christmas Parcels Sent Both East and West

HAMBURG, Germany, Dec. 5 (AP)—This Christmas, for the first time since the war, Germans are sending Christmas parcels both East and West.

German parcels to the East will go almost exclusively to prisoners of war still in Russia, Yugoslavia and other Eastern countries. Parcels to the West will go to friends and relatives in Western countries.

However, red tape does not make it easy for those sending parcels.

Packages sent eastward may contain food and articles for daily use, such as toilet articles and clothing. But any parcel containing printed matter, messages, books, or newspapers used for wrapping material is subject to confiscation.

Parcels sent to the Western countries contain mostly small valueless items. Nothing having trade value — cameras, for instance, is permitted. Anyway, the receiver probably would have to pay heavy duty on the item.

Antiques, souvenirs and needlework are permitted, however, so it is a sure bet that thousands of people will receive such items instead of the beautiful Meissen china sets their friends would like to send them.

The German Red Cross and the state radio sponsored a drive to provide Christmas parcels for Germans spending their fifth Christmas behind barbed wire. It was a great success. Germans in the three Western occupation zones and Berlin gave about 67,000 individually packed parcels. Almost a quarter-million marks ($100,000) in cash was donated. This is being used by the Red Cross to buy additional parcels.

Static

By DAVE UNDERHILL

Don't laugh when you read this, but I was once a boy soprano.

Yep, I can remember one day when I was at the tender age of six and stepped up on a chair, reached for the mike and tenderly sang the current popular tune "When The Moon Comes Over The Mountain."

Although I didn't weigh in, dripping wet, one quarter of Kate Smith's estimated tonnage, I managed to do a pretty fair job. Even if I do say so myself.

UNDERHILL

Well, as a reward for my efforts, my uncle took me out afterwards, got me an ice cream cone, and took me to the wrestling matches. That was the last time I ever went to see the grunt and groan boys, but not the last time I sang over the air waves.

There was a kiddies' talent program on one of the local stations that used to be on the air every week. Early Saturday mornings I would tuck a piece of sheet music under my arm, grab a street car and rush downtown for an audition. And quite often I would make the grade and be asked to return on Wednesday for the broadcast.

Through my grade and high school days I sang in school and church choirs. And when I went to college I sang in a glee club, and even made cigarette, show and date money by singing in several church choirs.

Now this is not a personal eulogy by any means, but rather in way of an introduction to a program that is going to be inaugurated over LW next Saturday night.

Charlie McFarlan, the Bedtime-Story-man, and Harwin Jewelers are going to have a half-hour program every Saturday night for kids who can sing, play an instrument or even recite some famous passage.

The idea is to give these kids who have been practicing so hard at their music a chance to be heard over the air. And it sure is a good idea.

First of all it is a step in the right direction towards developing of local talent. The kids will work harder when they know there is a chance of getting on the radio. Mom and dad will be rewarded for all the money they have put out on lessons, just hearing their young ones on the radio.

Further this step will have more deep and far reaching results in developing a love for good music in our youngsters. There is no greater satisfaction that I know of than working in harmony with a group of individuals, and that satisfaction is found in music.

And further yet this is a step toward development of good citizens. To reach a goal one must practice, and when one is practicing, as these kids will be, they will be busy and out of mischief. It all adds up.

Charlie was saying tonight that is is not a contest program. It is a program for any by pre-school and grade school children.

The whole idea got started on the night of Charlie's Bedtime Story Christmas party for all his young listeners. Many of them approached him after the program and said they would like a chance to perform over the air.

So there you are. A request spawned an idea, and the idea brought forth a program for the kids.

The only apparent rules for participation on the half-hour broadcast is that those wishing to participate write in to Charlie at LW, and those children actually appearing on the air be accompanied to the studio by their parents.

So good luck to you kids. It's a lot of fun, and in later days you will really appreciate all those long hours of practice put in learning to sing that song or play that musical instrument.

MONMOUTH, Dec. 5 (AP)—Rep. Howard Morgan (D-Multnomah) is resigning from the legislature to go on temporary active duty for the navy.

Along Nature's Trail

By Ken McLeod

At the turn of the last century we find our government taking a progressive step in the field of conservation of our natural resources. This step was in the acts creating the forest reserves which in later years have become know as the National forests. It took the vision and decided courage of our presidents Cleveland, McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt to set aside by presidential proclamation the large tracts of public land necessary.

Up to the time of the creation of the Forest Reserves the order of the day was to liquidate our forest lands as fast as possible. However, the very way the timber lands were being slashed eventually caused serious thinkers to become alarmed over the future and they prevailed upon the executive branch of the government to do something; Congress had done little to heed their warning. In 1876 a modest bit of recognition was made by the appropriation of two thousand dollars "to prosecute investigations and inquiries with the view of ascertaining the agnual amount of consumption, importation, and exportation of timber and other forest products, the probable supply for future wants, the influence of forests upon climate, and the measures that have been successfully applied in foreign countries, or that may be deemed applicable in this country, for the preservation and restoration or planting of forests." Dr. Franklin B. Hough was chosen for this momentous task.

Dr. Hough's report was 650 pages yet Congress ordered 25,000 copies to be printed. A second report was made in 1878 and a third in 1882. These reports gained wide interest both here and abroad, they assembled the information about American forest resources and the picture that was presented did much to point the way towards the necessity of forest conservation and convince the presidents that direct action was neccessary.

Today we are apt to think of our National forests as containing wonderful stands of timber. In reality however, by the time we actually came to the point of "locking the barn door" most of the finest tracts of timber originally on the public domain had already passed into private ownership; often by means more or less fraudulent which in those early days was made easy by the laxness and the inefficient administration of the land laws. The tales of fraud practiced in those early days are numerous, often amusing, acts at which the public would chuckle. Public reaction of the time could be expressed very well by our modern expression "so what!" After all, we wanted to get rid of the land as fast as possible.

At the time of Cleveland's first proclamation creating forest reserves there was not much of a wave of excitement because in many eyes of the day the land held only second rate and down to practically worthless timber.
