

Rays May Replace Heat Coils

PORTLAND, Dec. 14 (AP)—Invisible rays may replace the glowing-wire electric heaters to warm up a corner of the living room or den.

Experiments on infra-red heat waves show they bounce back from walls and furniture more readily than do those from the conventional type of electric heater, the Bonneville administration reported today. Its report was based on preliminary data from a four-year co-operative study carried out by two University of Washington professors and the BPA.

When the rays reflect back, the air—not the room furnishings—gains in heat, the administration reported.

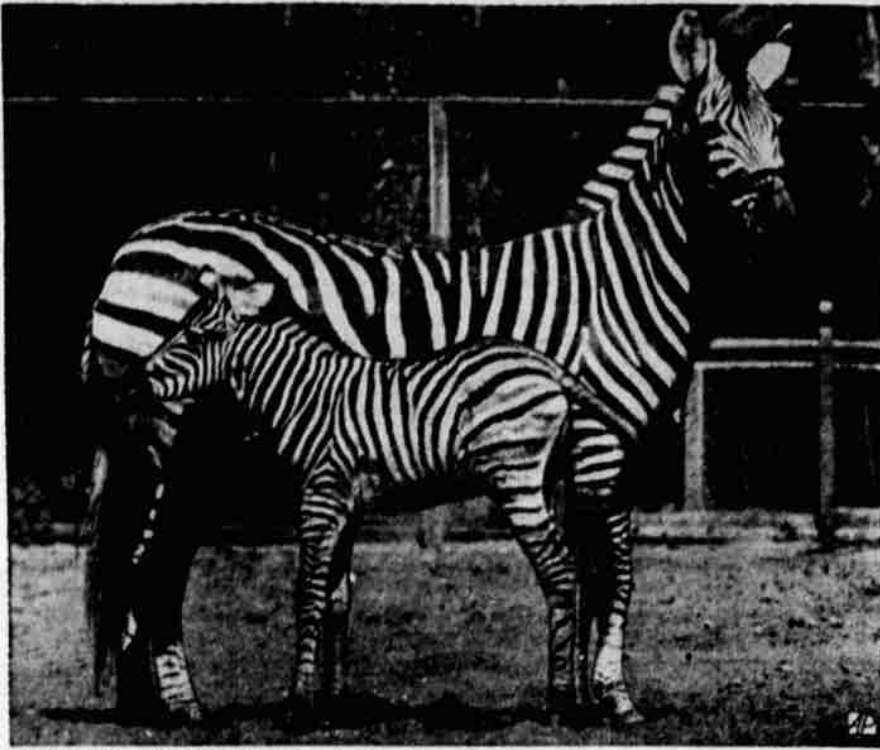

The research was directed by G. R. Shuck and George S. Smith of Washington's department of electric engineering.

Movie Bad Example For Actor

CAIRO (AP)—A British film company is making a movie here about drug smuggling.

A desert bedouin was hired to play a bit part as a hashish smuggler. Next morning he failed to appear for work.

Police had arrested him. The charge: hashish smuggling.
