having the darkest beards. Dave Todd, on the other hand, was awarded a bottle of hydrogen peroxide for having the blondest beard, while Vern Hunter's rose hair oil went well with his beard judged the reddest. Paul Jones, though, was given a little bag of Vigoro for the beard displaying the best effort.

The Mexican "pinata" to be used tomorrow night at the Spanish club's combined induction of new members and Christmas party has been finished by a special committee. The pinata now adorns the Spanish room, resplendent in red and yellow and green crepe paper around the papier mache ball filled with candies. At the party tomorrow night, blindfolded members will take turns striking the ball with a cane to try to break the pinata and release the candy.

Pep Peppers were seen in many places downtown last Saturday, selling Christmas Seals for the Tuberculosis drive at stores, banks and the post office.

Room 106 in KUHS has gone all out in Christmas decorations, trying for the prize being offered for the best-decorated home room. Students in that home room have hung up streamers of red and green crepe paper along the ceiling with silver hung over the streamers. They have also set up a miniature fireplace in the room, complete with a mantel and candles. A large pine wreath even adorns the door.

Room 308 has an enormous Santa Claus head on one wall and white folded crepe paper bells with gold balls on the front wall.

Medical Care—John H. Williams, 903 Mitchell, Southern Pacific employe, is receiving medical care at Hillside hospital.

House Fumes Knock Out 3 Persons

SALEM, Dec. 19 (AP)—Three members of a family found unconscious in a fume-filled house were recovering in a hospital today.

Firemen said all five members of the S. M. Hill family were affected by fumes from a damped fireplace. They reported 12-year-old Fay West was awakened by a noise early yesterday and found her mother and step-father and a baby brother unconscious in an adjoining bedroom. These three were taken to the hospital.

Later, firemen were summoned to the home when the girl and a step-sister, Geraldine Hill, 11, told neighbors they were ill. Firemen administered oxygen to the girls.

1. One old wives' tale that bobs up periodically is the story that American oil companies protect the sale of their established products by keeping new developments off the market. An example of how far this fairy tale misses the truth is the case of Union Oil's remarkable purple motor oil.

2. Shortly after the war, we introduced our new post-war motor oil, Triton. By all standards, Triton was unexcelled. In fact, it was so good we told people they could safely drive it 6 months between drains if they chose. Consequently, we thought our oil program was set for several years. But 12 months later our research engineers came up with a purple motor oil for passenger cars which they said was even better.

3. Just to prove their claims, they sealed it in the crankcases of four new automobiles and drove them continuously up and down the Pacific Coast for 30,000 miles! At the end of the test they opened up the motors and showed us the results: The engine parts were as good as new and the oil—by every analysis—showed no more deterioration than ordinary motor oils exhibit after 1,000 miles.

The story of the purple motor oil or: Why an oil company has to be progressive

4. That posed a question. Should we hold this new purple oil off the market for a few years and protect Triton, or put it on sale immediately? The answer was that we had no choice. For we were in competition. If we didn't put this purple oil on the market as soon as possible, some of our competitors might develop a comparable product and beat us to the punch.

5. As a result we introduced our purple oil to the motorists of the Pacific Coast under the brand name of Royal Triton. Royal Triton was not only an overnight success with our own Western customers; visitors from the East even took it home with them and continued buying it by mail. Consequently, we've had to expand our manufacturing facilities and lay plans for marketing it throughout the country.

Moral: Next time anyone tells you oil companies hold improved products off the market, please tell him to see us.
