Norwegians Irk Soviets

MOSCOW, (AP)—Russia charged Norway last night with breaking a 31-year-old treaty by letting Atlantic pact nations use Arctic islands of the strategic Spitzbergen archipelago for naval bases.

The protest note which Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky handed to Norwegian Ambassador Carsten Helgeby also accused Norway of letting officers of the North Atlantic treaty organization approach the Russian border on inspection trips.

The Norwegian government takes upon itself the responsibility for the results of such a policy, the note said. It warned that Russia could not remain "indifferent."

Russia repeated her previous charges that Norway, through her membership in the Atlantic alliance, was taking a hostile attitude towards the Soviet Union.

In Oslo, Norway's foreign minister rejected the protest note and Foreign Minister Halvard Lange denied that there ever had been "a question of building bases on Spitzbergen."

Lange also declared that "the relation of command" in no way altered the purely defensive character of the Atlantic pact.

Norway is the only one of the 12 original NATO members which borders on Russia.

The note declared Norway violated the 1920 international treaty demilitarizing the islands by letting NATO forces take control of Spitzbergen Island and the long-disputed Bear (Medvezhi) island which lies about 475 miles northwest of the Soviet port of Murmansk. Spitzbergen lies some 1000 miles northwest of Murmansk.

Russia has special interests in the polar area. Both she and Norway get coal from Spitzbergen. The 1920 treaty gave Spitzbergen to Norway and prohibited the use of the islands for "warlike purposes."

On several occasions Russia has claimed that Bear island treaty on that ground.

(Before world war one Spitzbergen was a sort of no-man's land, claimed by Russia, Norway and some other nations. The 1920 pact was signed by Britain, the Denmark, Norway and Sweden, among others. Russia did not sign but subsequently adhered to the treaty, which became effective in 1925.)

Professor Sees City Danger

PORTLAND, (AP)—A University of British Columbia professor thinks that big shopping centers and other forms of high powered living are extremely dangerous to the future of a city.

The professor, Dr. Leonard C. Marsh, speaking at a meeting of the League of Oregon Cities here Monday warned against "making the city bigger and bigger, increasing the cost of living in the city, increasing the fatigues involved in commuting."

Naval Might Shown Ike

ABOARD THE U.S.S. DES MOINES IN THE MEDITERRANEAN, (AP)—Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, visibly impressed, watched from the deck of the U.S.S. Des Moines as a mighty American fleet began brilliant demonstrations of how naval power can help defend Europe.

From the wind-whipped bridge of this heavy cruiser, Eisenhower could see the gray shapes of aircraft carriers, heavy cruisers, destroyers, and smaller vessels stretching across a choppy sea as they eye each other closely.

Correspondents had been warned that the number of warships in the U.S. sixth fleet participating in the maneuvers was secret.

But the fleet fanning out behind Eisenhower and his flagships was described officially as the greatest single force the United States has in Europe, carrying more firepower per man than all the American ground troops in Eisenhower's Atlantic pact countries.

Eisenhower, a courteous Admiral for three days, will see the navy's whole battle book, including secret new developments. The big navy guns will take a break, abandoned Serbian shore with explosive fury probably unmatched since the Korean war's Inchon landings.

So secret are the techniques the general will see demonstrated that no foreign observers were permitted to go along. Non-American newspapermen also were banned. Correspondents were briefed on the importance of security.

The supreme commander plans to climb into a helicopter and fly to the 45,000-ton carrier Franklin D. Roosevelt for a firsthand look at carrier operations. Thursday, when the maneuvers end, a carrier plane will fly back to his headquarters in France.

Naval officers emphasize the importance of the Mediterranean-based sixth fleet in Eisenhower's plans to defend Europe. A long American line of carriers, from sea bombardment and planes taking off from carriers in the Mediterranean could fly as far as Northern France or deep into Austria to strike at any aggressor.

Eva Toots Peron Horn

BUENOS AIRES, (AP)—Eva Peron, author of Argentina's about-to-be new constitution, says that a century will see the end of "social life as well as the aristocratic and bourgeois society that practices it."

The wife of Pres. Juan D. Peron made this declaration in her book "The Reason for My Life." It went on sale today.

In connection with her comments on society, Senora Peron denied she entered public life as the wife of the president because Argentina's aristocracy had snubbed her.

As to the hostility of the oligarchy, she can do no less than laugh, she wrote. "I ask myself why could the oligarchy have rejected me? For my humble origin? For my artistic activity? Never was an oligarchy hostile to anyone who could be useful to it. Power or money never had had antecedents for the genuine oligarchy."

The 317-page book contains almost no biographical details of Senora Peron's life, save for a few indirect references to her early poverty and to her career later on the screen and in radio before she married Peron.

However, it provides an opportunity for her to get across some subjects. For instance, she defends Peron's announced position "between capitalism and communism, but says that "none-the-less, by my nature I am not always at this midway point."

"For me almost always, justice is a little behind the center, closer to the workers than the bosses," she writes.

Most of the book she devoted to the work of herself and Peron for the workers and the poor. It is full of praise for Peron and words of modesty concerning herself. She said her husband was like "the great condor of the Andes," while she was only "one in a huge flock of sparrows."

Charles Coburn Continues Championing Poker Players

HOLLYWOOD, (AP)—Poker players of America, you have a champion. He is that Georgia gentleman with a monocle, Charles Coburn, who is carrying on a campaign to protect the rights of card-playing citizens.

As any newspaper reader knows, Coburn has more than a passing interest in the subject. He and a few Hollywood cronies were recently interrupted in a friendly poker match by a couple of police officers. The players were accused of breaking the gambling laws and were fined $15.

The actor said he usually plays once a week, when not working in a picture. The players assemble around nine, break at midnight for food and quit about two. The average pot is worth about $2, although sometimes as much as $5. The game is played on the ocean, several card high-low or one-eyed jacks wild for them. "Vicarious games," Coburn calls 'em.

Does he draw to an inside straight? "Never," he replied emphatically. "I don't like to draw to straights of any kind. Flushes, yes."

What about playing poker with women? "I don't recommend it," he said. "I never like to play it tough with women, because I hate to see them lose. But on the other hand, they show no mercy. They can be just as tough in a poker game as any man."

"That's why I am campaigning for a better law. After all, laws are made to protect peaceful, respectable citizens, not to punish them. If a law is a bad one, it is not observed; and certainly this is a bad law. It permits law officers to enter private homes without a warrant, and that is a violation of the U.S. constitution."

"The police have enough crime to take care of, without breaking up poker games. But it's not the fault of the police. They have to enforce the law, even if they don't understand it. It's up to the people to see that their legislators pass fair, understandable laws. And I plan to have some jurist friends of mine work out a better wording of the law. Then I'll circulate some petitions to take them up to Sacramento to show the legislators."

Coburn said he received a flood of consoling mail after his citation. One letter was from a southern bishop who said he himself more than made up for his sins by contributing to the legislators.

"Peron has been compared to a great, many leaders of history," she said. "But I believe he resembles more another class of genius: those that created new philosophies or religions. I will not admit the heresy of comparing him with Christ, but I am sure that, imitating Christ, Peron feels a profound love for humanity."

CHICAGO, (AP)—The mounted figure of Bushman, the famous Gorilla, who died last New Year's Day, was returned to the Lincoln Park zoo yesterday. It will be placed on exhibit in the monkey house, renamed Bushman Hall for the 500-pound gorilla who had been the star attraction at the zoo for 20 years.
