HALLOWEEN PAYOFF

LANCASTER, Pa. (P) — Mannheim township teenagers who were able to repress Halloween high spirits get their reward tomorrow night. Police Chief Fred A. Bever promised it many weeks ago in an appeal to adolescents. Porego the rough stuff on spook night, he appealed, "and we'll see that you have fun anyway." So with the help of other public officials and private citizens, he organized a big dance, to be held soon after Halloween. "Tomorrow night's the payoff for being good," Bever said, "and there isn't a regret anywhere."

Real North Pole, Letters To Santa Slated in Alaska

SEATTLE, (P) — The "pole" part of the North Pole may have been a misnomer up to this time but something is going to be done about it come December 10.

And if Santa Claus really does make his home there he's going to get such a flood of letters on that day he'll need a private secretary until next Christmas.

All of which is a way of saying that plans generated by Stan Garson, Point Barrow oil-worker and ex-deliverer, have come to fruition. With the aid of an airline, a newspaper woman and various other persons and organizations, that is, and without the help of the U.S. air force which wouldn't have any part of the stunt.

REAL POLE

Garson suggested some time back that a real pole ought to be dropped at the north pole. He even chipped in $150 of his money to have a 9-foot hollow steel cylinder constructed and painted like a candy cane (or barber pole, if your inclinations are a little less romantic).

Mrs. Audree Vance, Fairbanks journalist and radio announcer, liked the idea and added a suggestion—how about dropping off some "honest-to-goodness" letters to Santa Claus. "Fine," says Garson, and it was a fait accompli (look it up yourself).

Alaska Airlines Chairman H.W. Marshall heard that the air force was taking an upper attitude toward the project and offered to donate one of its four-engine specials for the 3300 mile flight from International airport, Fairbanks, Alaska.

Gable Divorce Delayed

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (P) — Clark Gable will have to wait five months for the trial of his wife's divorce suit.

He wanted to hurry matters by getting a divorce in Nevada, but was barred recently by an injunction in which California courts claimed jurisdiction.

Then he asked for an early trial here, and was informed Wednesday there will be no room on the docket until April or May.
