

New City Jail About To Be Opened For Business; New Color Motif Prevails

By HALE SCARBROUGH

The squat concrete and steel building back of the city hall, Klamath Falls' new jail, is about ready for occupancy.

Sometime in the next couple of weeks, probably, the police department will move into the new building, taking along all its equipment and whatever prisoners happen to be in the old hoosegow at the moment.

The new building, which has been about nine months building, will house the department in more elegance and space than the police have known in Klamath Falls heretofore, and will accommodate about 50 or 60 prisoners in considerably more style than to which they might have grown accustomed in the ancient city hall basement lockup.

The present jail, in use since 1914, many times has been condemned by grand juries and generally hasn't been considered a fit keeping place for prisoners. But it has been steadily in use over the years.

Before the last war the city and county entered on a plan for a joint county-city jail and justice building, and saved money toward that end up until last winter. Part of the city's money was raised by taxation for jail purposes and couldn't be spent any other way.

But the joint jail plan fell through and the city put its money into a jail of its own, located on the lot back of the city hall. Howard Perrin was architect and Pinner and Watkins the contractors.

The original bid price was $107,690 for construction plus $212 for ironwork.

Additional work figured in after the contract was let and furnishings will up the total price to somewhere around $120,000.

The jail faces on Walnut. Entering the front door a customer comes first to a business window where such activities as collecting parking meter ticket money and filling out accident reports is carried on. Down a corridor to the left are private rooms for the police chief, detectives, sergeants and a squadroom.

Other customers, who probably won't be coming into the building unaccompanied, will enter by a side door and be confronted immediately by the booking desk. Right across the hall are drunk tanks where prisoners are to be put to sober up before being transferred to the main bullpen or cells upstairs.

The second floor contains the bullpen and half a dozen smaller cells, including women's quarters.

The decor of the building is something more than remarkable, and it's a question whether it'll be appreciated.

Walls inside the side door are painted a sort of pastel orange; the drunk tanks are aluminum; upstairs corridor walls are light green; bullpen walls are buff; cell walls are green.

The cell furniture—bunks and picnic type benches—is made of steel. The color scheme imparts a rather airy effect.

Henley Man Wins Medal

A silver star, awarded to Sgt. Wayne Gober for gallantry in action has been sent to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Gober, Henley.

The recognition followed Gober's volunteer accompaniment of an infantry unit sent to dislodge deeply entrenched enemy positions on a steep hill at Hwachon last June 6.

Sgt. Gober carried a flame thrower into the attack.

He has been in Korea since last December 17 and writes his family that he may be home for the holidays under the rotation plan.

Seacoasts or exposed hilly districts are excellent locations for windmills for generating electricity.

Psychology Prof Up For Extortion

LOS ANGELES, (AP)—A psychology teacher faces felony extortion charges today.

Robert W. Major, 48, was formally accused yesterday of demanding $8100 from ex-actor Ben Bard and his young wife under threat of publicizing certain recordings.

Police said Major claimed the recordings were of conversations between Mrs. Bard and a student at her husband's drama school. Mrs. Bard has denied the conversations ever took place.

Major, a teacher in the city school system, was jailed in lieu of $10,000 bail.

School was dismissed this afternoon for the next two days, and of course we are all looking forward to a vacation crammed with fun and lots of activities.

Even so, the fact that tomorrow is the day we give thanks was not forgotten by the students in all the vacation excitement. The annual Thanksgiving assembly, which is a religious service and under the sponsorship of the city, was held this morning during activity period.

Reverend David Barnett of the First Presbyterian church, was guest speaker. Seniors Marvin Nerseth and Frances Stearns, president of the senior try-hiv, gave short talks following the Thanksgiving theme.

Also featured on the program were several numbers by the girls' glee. Douglas Leichty, president of the city and member of the assembly committee, was the master of ceremonies.

"THE PROOF POSITIVE"

El Rodeo members are trying to get the junior and senior portraits finished next week.

Those upperclassmen who have not turned in their proofs should do so immediately if they want their pictures in the year book.

The sales campaign will start some time in December. Although the price has not been announced it is expected to run about the same as last year. There is a discount for early purchases, so students you are advised to buy one early when the sales campaign starts!

As it is one of the main events of the year, let's not forget the Jobs Daughter's formal this Friday night. Programs were on sale today, but if you didn't get yours, they will be sold at the door.

Here's hoping that all of you really have a fine Thanksgiving!
