Now Is The Time To Get Set For Rabies; Health Departments Ask Action

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE
Associated Press Science Editor

NEW YORK, (AP)—Now is the time to prepare for mad dogs and the risk of rabies from their bites.

The belief that the hot, summer dog days have any connection with mad dogs is just a superstition. Rabies runs the year around, but it increases in late winter and spring.

The preparation is something the U.S. public health service would like very much—namely to vaccinate all dogs. That is the only measure which will stop the disease.

In most areas the public is indifferent until a rabies scare strikes near home. Then there is a clean-up. Meanwhile in other areas nothing has been done.

Last year nine persons and 7901 animals died of rabies in the United States. Many wild animals died without getting into the census, which is kept by the federal security agency, public health service, communicable disease center, veterinary public health services.

The big fact is that rabies have been spreading in the United States for some years. The increase is not marked, but states hitherto rabies-free are coming into the mad areas each year. Last year added Nebraska, South Dakota, Montana and Washington. This year's additions will include North Dakota, which is listed as zero rabies in the first nine months. That means merely that North Dakota's final reports are not in.

The newspapers of that state report about 250 cases of suspected animal rabies thus far with 50 verified by laboratory studies.

Chick Price To Go Up Next Year

CORVALLIS, (AP)—The price of baby chicks will go up next year, an Oregon State college survey indicated today.

Noel Bennion, college poultry specialist, said hatcherymen indicated the price would be up 5 percent.

He said he found the number of chicks hatched in Oregon this year will total about 15,000,000. A 14 percent increase in the hatch is expected next year. Most of the increase will go into the broiler industry, not egg production. Expected prices for day-old chicks next year: straight leghorn chicks, up a cent to 19 cents each; leghorn pullet chicks, up a cent to 27 cents. Others also are expected to be up a cent.

Blind Radio Mechanic Aids Other Handicapped Persons

AP Newsfeatures

SAN DIEGO, Calif.—A radio mechanic at the San Diego naval air station who was blinded in combat maneuvers in Hawaii in 1944 is one of the greatest boosters of the government's employ-the-handicapped program.

"Disability is no drawback to ability," says Andrew Jackson Mills, one of more than 1000 physically handicapped workers employed by the navy in this area. Mills operates specially-built instruments by touch and sound and aligns and checks the electrical output of various electronic equipment at the naval air station.

A former resident of Henryette, Okla., where his mother, Mrs. Betty L. Mills, lives, Mills started to work at the air station two months ago.

Excellent His supervisors say he is doing an excellent job, and that his exceptional efficiency sets a high standard for all employees on the station.

After being blinded, Mills, who had been doing aerial photography and relief mapping in the marine corps, was sent to the Philadelphia naval hospital where he was the first man to finish training under the navy's rehabilitation program for the blind.

After his release from the hospital, Mills attended the University of Redlands and Claremont graduate school, both in California, where he earned both a bachelor of arts and a master's degree.

Mills has been interested in radio since he was 11. He holds an amateur's license and operates his own home with his wife, two daughters and his seeing-eye dog.

A total of 1075 physically handicapped workers—veterans make up about half the total—are employed at naval activities in this area.

More amputees are employed than workers with any other single type of handicap. Blind workers are next in number.

In addition to ordnance mechanics and typists, they are employed as messengers, truck drivers, key punch operators, plumbers, welders, firefighters, guard, radio and automobile mechanics, engineers, architects and physicians.
