

Nina Warren Governor's Partner At Home but She Shuns Politics

By RICHARD KLEINER
NEW YORK, (NEA)—The Earl Warrens have a little family secret, shared by a couple of thousand people who heard California's governor reveal it at a political rally.

The good-humored crowd set up a chant when Mrs. Warren appeared on the platform. They wanted her to speak.

But it was Earl Warren who spoke. And, with his friendly grin, he said, "Folks, I want to let you in on a family secret. We have a rule in our family—I do the talking in public and Mrs. Warren does the talking at home."

Those who know the Warrens insist that the statement is a good, crowd-pleasing joke and nothing more. The implication that Nina Warren is complete boss of the Warrens' household is pure male modesty. The Warrens operate a partnership deal at home—on everything but political decisions.

INDEPENDENT
Earl Warren is an independent man. He is politically independent—witness his 1946 campaign, when he crossed in the unique California primary and won both Republican and Democratic nominations. His independence of mind extends to his personal decisions, too. Nina Warren may be consulted, but Earl Warren is a man who makes up his own mind.

Earl's perfectly all right with her. That's the way she wants it. She considers herself a wife and housewife and, in her definition, a wife and housewife is a person who stays in the background and doesn't interfere in her husband's public business, she may—and does—accompany him to important affairs, but her role is strictly supporting.

Besides, she has plenty to do without getting involved in politics. She has six children and, so far, three grandchildren. Even for a governor's wife, that spells a lot of work.

NINA WARREN: For a family secret, a crowd-pleasing joke.

BIG ASSET

Warren's supporters have long felt that the handsome Warren family is one of his strongest political assets. A charming, gracious and well-behaved son, three eye-catching daughters—in the parlance of the politicians, they add up to a home-loving man and people vote for home-loving men.

A family of six was voted upon by Earl Warren and Nina Palquist Meyers long before they had any dreams of living in the White House. Warren was the 34-year-old district attorney of Alameda county when they were married, and his pretty bride was a widow with a six-year-old son.

"We decided," she says, "that we wanted six youngsters—three girls, for Earl and three boys for me."

Nina Warren's craving for a large family is undoubtedly traceable to her own unhappy childhood. She was born in Sweden, brought to Iowa as an infant, and taken to California when she was still a baby. Her mother died when she was three and her father when she was 13.

WORKER

She and two sisters were brought up by a stepmother and a step-uncle. They had to go to work as soon as they finished school. She was a cashier and a bookkeeper in a plumbing supply company.

Her first husband, Grover Meyers, a musician, died when their son, Jim, was three weeks old, and she went back to work, this time as a saleslady in a women's specialty store. She was manager of the store when she met Earl Warren.

Her training stood her well for her later life, as first lady of California. She had learned how to make friends with people, and became an expert hostess.

She learned good taste, and completely remodeled California's decrepit governor's mansion when she first moved in. She had learned what it is to be poor, and she is very conscious of the plight of those less fortunate than she.

Yule Trees Big Business

By CHARLES LYONS
AP News Staff Writer

This year more than 10 million Christmas trees will be used in the United States. Planning for most of them was begun about a decade ago by the Christmas tree farmer.

In early days wild stock was used exclusively for Christmas trees. With the growing interest in conservation in the early years of the 20th century, hand-planted trees appeared. Since then the trend has been toward the domestic rather than the wild tree.

Any land that is well drained and free from large woody vegetation will probably grow Christmas trees. The annual income per acre from a Christmas tree plot may well compare favorably with that from a more intensive crop.

KNOW-HOW

A Christmas-tree farmer has to have a good deal of know-how. He has to be alert to possible hazards from livestock, fire, insects and disease, rodents, adverse weather, thieves and the competition of "volunteer" hardwoods growing up in the Christmas tree plantation.

Some farmers plant an equal area each year until the first harvest, say in 10 years. After harvesting, each area is replanted the following spring, thus a rotation is established and the supply is constant.

Four groups of conifers are in common use as Christmas trees: pine, spruce, fir and hemlock. Pines hold their needles well and are rapid growers, compared to spruce or fir. However, they usually present a too open, scraggly appearance. The spruces are popular because of their compact bushy growth and conical shape. One of the most beautiful trees produced in the U. S. is the black spruce from swamp bogs of Minnesota.

NO PRUNING

Douglas firs and balsam firs develop into satisfactory trees without pruning. Spruces require pruning after the first five years. Hemlocks are the least satisfactory because of the tendency to needle loss when brought indoors.

The demands of the public determine cutting time for Christmas trees, whether it be for 3-foot table models or the more conventional 6 and 7 footers.

TITO INVITED

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, (UP)—A group of American congressmen have unofficially invited Premier Marshal Tito to visit the United States. The marshal said the "press of duties" prevented him from accepting at this time.
