

Nazi's Name Coming Off

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., (AP) — Harvard university took steps today to remove the name of a German listed on the school's memorial plaque of world war two dead.

The university said in a brief statement that "the inclusion of the name of one alumnus who served in the German army was an error and will be corrected."

The German was Adolf Samwald, who attended the Harvard divinity school in 1924 and 1925. He was taken into the Nazi army as a chaplain in January, 1942, and was killed on the Russian front June 3, 1943.

Omitted from the memorial plaque was the name of a more famous enemy alumnus: Isoroku Yamamoto, commander-in-chief of the Japanese navy, reported killed in naval action in the Pacific in May, 1942.

He was a special student at Harvard in 1919-20.

Teacher Can't Spank Kids

OKLAHOMA CITY, (AP) — Miss Della Seitter can't spank her second grade pupils at Lincoln school, no matter what they do.

The teacher has two broken arms. She fell and broke them Sunday on the way to church. But does that keep Miss Seitter away from school?

Of course not. Friends and neighbors help her dress. And pupils hold books before her while others recite.

Pennsylvania produced two million tons of bituminous coal in 1950. In 1950 the state's output was 102,500,000 tons.
