New Materials Work Wonders Fabric World

By DOROTHY ROE Associated Press Women's Editor Is it animal, vegetable or mineral? The old game of twenty questions is up against some tough sledding in the new fabrics that are on the market today. A generation ago the answers were simple. Most fabrics were either cotton or silk (animal). But now we have clothing upholstery fabrics, automobile tops and tires, awnings and outdoor furniture covers that are none of these. They are members of the vast new family of synthetics which are changing our way of life faster than we think. The woman who goes shopping in the new wonderland of miracle fabrics, with the purpose of getting the most for her shrinking dollar, needs to be fully informed as to the specific advantages of each. CONFUSION The man-made fibers are getting more and more wonderful—but they are arriving on the market so fast that most average shoppers are confused as to which is which and why. Most women are familiar with the first of the synthetic fabrics, rayon, used in a great percentage of feminine apparel. But many do not know the difference between its two forms—viscose and acetate. Viscose rayon, the first to be evolved from chemists' test tubes, is sturdy and tough, can be laundered almost as casually as cotton, does not melt under ironing. Acetate rayon, introduced shortly after the stock market crash of 1929, is a more luxurious fabric in drape and appearance, requires greater care in handling. A move is now under way to require specific labeling of rayon fabrics as "viscose" or "acetate" or a blend of both, for consumer guidance in correct cleaning and care of garments. Next and most sensational of the synthetic fibers was nylon, which was introduced late in 1938 and since has revolutionized the stocking and lingerie market. Because of its great strength and quick-drying properties, nylon has become a staple wardrobe item in most American homes. LAUNDERING Nylon was an instant and sensational market success, and the demand for it still exceeds the supply. Its resistance to wear and its easy laundering endeared it to American women almost overnight. However, there were some points in which nylon was found lacking. Nylon curtains were found to shrink or stretch according to weather conditions. It did not withstand exposure to sunlight well. So the chemist got to work and produced a new fiber, orlon, which had many of nylon's favorable characteristics and in addition stood up under all kinds of adverse weather conditions. Orlon has greater absorbency than nylon, a softer feel and is impervious to humidity changes. It is also used for a great variety of outdoor fabrics. Orlon is said to be the first fabric used in an automobile top which will last for the life of the car. NEW Newest of the synthetic family is dacron, which promises to give men a new freedom from cleaner's bills. This man-made fiber, on the market now in small quantities, is used in men's suits and blends. In women's blouses and other wearing apparel. So when you go shopping, read the fabric labels well and remember what they mean: viscose rayon, for sturdy wear; acetate, for luxury fabrics, to be handled with care; nylon, for quick-drying and resistance to abrasion; orlon, for weather resistance; dacron, for crease resistance; "fiber E," for long-wearing upholstery and rug. All of them offer a new horizon of luxury and usefulness at prices within the reach of average budgets, helping to keep the American standard of living high.
