

Glue-Up Plant Salvages Much Lumber Mills Wasted in Past

AFTER A HALF-HOUR in hydraulic presses, blocks from the White Pine box factory cutoff saws are no longer waste material. The rough pieces are later planed and dressed for use in construction.

LAKEVIEW — The amount of waste in a tree of sawtimber has long been the bane of lumber manufacturers. Now one means of salvaging one part of that waste — the knotty blocks from ponderosa pine box factories — is the basis for a new industry at White Pine Lumber Co. plant at Lakeview.

The blocks are being glued together to make large wall and flooring planks for home building.

S. S. Jaksick, general manager for White Pine's three operations at Lakeview, Alturas, and Reno has put a glue-up plant into operation at Lakeview. Glue and large hydraulic presses convert the former waste into heavy, strong planks.

The new plant is the first major result of the establishment last winter of the Lakeview federal sustained timber unit. This unit keeps in this area the trees that are grown here, and thus assures a local supply of lumber for saw-milling and remanufacturing payrolls.

The timber unit is the result of nearly three years of effort on the part of the industrial committee of the Lake chamber of commerce, spearheaded by Ray Harlan and T. R. Conn. The allowable annual cut of national forest timber in the Lakeview working circle was only 50,000,000 board feet per year. But local mills were built to cut and were cutting much more than that, thanks to the availability of private timber.

However, private timber supplies were being rapidly exhausted and the committee foresaw that shortly the mills would have to cut back production and payrolls to stay within the allowable cut of national forest timber. So they hit on the timber unit as the answer.

They reasoned that a cut-back in local mill production and payroll to fit the allowable cut of national forest timber would seriously hurt the economy of the Lakeview community, unless new industries to further remanufacture the lumber or to utilize the waste materials could be established. And it would be impossible to get new investments unless the available national forest timber could be kept here to assure a yearly lumber supply.

After about two years of study, the committee petitioned the forest service to establish the unit, which it did following a public hearing here in March, 1949. But objections were raised which held up the unit while the issue was fought out before a public lands committee and a subsequent hearing before the secretary of agriculture.

Secretary Brannan upheld the order last February, and soon thereafter Jaksick announced his plans for his glue-up operation here. First he built a large building, 100 by 250 feet with concrete slab floor and oval truss roof, to house the plant. Then he began saving blocks from White Pine's box factory. And the first full shift in the glue-up work was on November 20. Uruguay has no pure-blooded Indians within its borders.

Copper Shortage Cuts Phones

NEW YORK, (AP)—The American Telephone and Telegraph Co. says more than a million persons desiring phone service in 1952 will not get it because of inadequate government copper allocations.

The A. T. and T. said yesterday in a statement that its bell system had been allocated copper supplies 25 percent below requirements for the first quarter of 1952 by the national production authority.

Fifteen million new telephones have been added in the past six years, the company said, but it still has a waiting list of 800,000. Bell said the list will exceed a million next year if current copper allocations are not increased.

THESE TWO PIECES (not full size) are samples of the work being done at the White Pine Lumber Co. glue-up plant at Lakeview. Wall and floor materials are made from lumber blocks otherwise wasted.

Fire Destroys Family Dream

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)—The new home Karl Zentmeyer spent the last year building went up in smoke yesterday — along with his two children's Christmas presents.

Zentmeyer, a plumber, had been working on the ranch type house in his spare time since November, 1950. Since last February he, his wife, their five-year-old daughter, Janet, and two-year-old son, Douglas, have been living in one finished wing with hopes of having a completed home by Christmas Eve.

Yesterday morning a stove exploded and burned the house to the ground. Zentmeyer, his wife, and the two children managed to escape unscathed, with only the clothing they were wearing — and a large order of perseverance.

"As long as I can work," said Zentmeyer, looking at the charred wreckage, "I'll make it all back again."
