Dr. E. P. Jordan

Again and again the first question published today is brought up in various forms.

Q—For several years I have been troubled by unpleasant breath, and I always have a bad taste in my mouth. This is sometimes eliminated for a short time after I eat. Doctors say they can find nothing wrong with me. I have no sinus trouble and no tonsils.

Mrs. C. K.

A—The principle causes for bad breath are an unpleasant taste in the mouth are conditions around the mouth and nose such as pyorrhea alveolaris and decayed teeth, bad sinuses and bad tonsils.

Also inadequate brushing of the teeth allows food material to decay.

Heavy smoking and the drinking of alcoholic liquors can also produce this condition. Certain food odors, particularly those whose odor is eliminated through the lungs, such as garlic and onions, are a not unusual cause for halitosis and bad taste.

Diseases of the stomach or other parts of the gastro-intestinal tract and disease of the lungs are less common causes.

In a case where no definite physical reason can be found, either locally or generally, about all that a person can do is to experiment with reduction in smoking or alcohol or the elimination of certain foodstuffs.

Q—My question is regarding going up and down stairs, and whether it harms the heart or legs. I know that the day after washday, my legs ache.

Mrs. F. M.

A—Going down stairs should cause no difficulty except to a person who might have arthritis of the knees or some other disability of that kind. Climbing stairs, on the other hand, takes a lot of energy and increases the work of the heart, and of course, of the legs. People who are in good health are not apparently harmed by a reasonable amount of stair-climbing, but the stairs should be taken more slowly as one grows older.

In anyone who has heart trouble, or notices such effects as Mrs. M. does, it would seem wise to confine the amount of stair-climbing to the necessary minimum.

Q—What would cause a woman in her sixties to have an open sore on the breast which discharges some blood and pus, apparently from the nipple?

A Reader

A—This is a serious symptom which could mean cancer, and medical advice should be sought promptly.

Q—Please tell me why I want to drink water all the time. J. R.

A—Excessive thirst is one of the symptoms of diabetes, and while it is insufficient on which to make a diagnosis all by itself, it is reason enough to call for a physician's examination and examination of the blood and urine with this in mind.

Don't Diet-- Not Even For Happiness. It Won't Work

By ED CREAUGH
(For Hal Boyle)

WASHINGTON (AP)—Mad at your wife—or husband? Thinking of going home to mother—or father? Convinced, after giving it a fair trial, that you plucked a peewee in the garden of love?

Wait, friend. There's hope for you yet. An easy-as-pie new formula, just published in "This Week" magazine, tells how you can put the magic back into your marriage—if you live.

The secret: Lose weight. Not just a few pounds from around the hips. Lots of weight. Pounds and pounds. Get to be scrawny, in fact. Thin down to the point where you'll have to walk past twice to cast a shadow.

This is the conclusion to be drawn from a survey called "Predicting Success or Failure in Marriage" by E. W. Burgess and I. S. Cottrell, Jr. They make no bones about it: Skinny, bony people have happier marriages than their better padded neighbors.

The successful husbands, say the authors, are likely to be 15 pounds or more underweight, which seems to show once and for all that malnutrition does more than psychotry can to justify woman's ways to man.

Well, maybe.

But it doesn't work out that way among the people in our neighborhood.

It may be just coincidence, but the only couple within three blocks who regularly slug it out at the drop of an insult are thin, pale people who—in the opinion of their friends—would get along much better if they had a little beef on their bones.

And the most contented couple, on the other hand, are a man with a Charles Laughton figure and a woman with the approximate girth of a beach cabana.

They hold hands in public, after 15 years of marriage, and they don't care who sees them.

The wife in this case started worrying about her weight, a few years back, and went on a diet. Ate nothing but bananas and steak, or some such nonsense. She lost weight, all right. But she also lost her good disposition.

One night, watching her husband hit into the potatoes and gravy, she threw a salt shaker at him. He was so outraged that, for the first time in his life, he went out and got loaded. When he came home, she wouldn't let him in.

He went to a hotel, phoned a lawyer, and it looked like the end of their romance. But his wife ate a couple of cream puffs, to soothe her nerves, and felt so much better that she went downtown and apologized to her husband.

They went on a second honeymoon and there hasn't been a cross word between them since. She weighs in at 167 today, a gain of nine pounds since Christmas.

No, starvation doesn't really seem to settle the problem of man-and-wife discord.

"Feed the brute," the wise old wives used to say. And if good living thickened his waistline, at least that made him less attractive to other women.

As for the man, any honest wife will tell you that he seldom takes a good look at her—and when he does, he sees her as the shy, slender girl he married, though she may by this time have all she can do to squeeze into a size 32 skirt.

Anti-Warren Clan Gathers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—Home state foes of Gov. Earl Warren proceeded Tuesday with their campaign to oppose his bid for the Republican presidential nomination.

An insurgent party action instructed a four-man executive committee to organize a slate of national convention delegates led by Rep. Thomas Werdel of Bakersfield.

Regular Republican leaders within the state are supporting a slate pledged to Warren. The third-term governor was chairman of California delegations in 1936, 1944 and 1948.

Speakers at an anti-Warren rally Monday night complained that the governor was more a Democrat than a Republican.

Republican Gov. Arthur B. Langbein of Washington told another GOP meeting that the party can succeed in the 1952 campaign only if it selects out the best program and the best leadership.

Higher Milk Price Hinted

GEARHART (AP)—A hint of higher prices to come for dairy products was dropped here Monday by President Fred M. Knox of the Oregon Dairymen Association.

Knox, a Gaston, Ore., dairyman, told the opening session of the association's annual convention that costs still were increasing in the dairy business.

In large part these costs stem from public demand for better sanitation, improved barns and equipment, he said.

"If the public is going to continue to demand these things, they are going to have to accept higher dairy prices," he asserted, adding costs still were going up with labor particularly hard to find.

"A recent Oregon State College study shows that the average dairy farmer receives only one-half to one-third the hourly pay of industrial workers, besides putting up with harder conditions and longer hours. Our ratio of costs to income is much higher than almost any other industry," he said.

Even in the best of political times, it has never been easy to assure the American public an intelligent discussion of major politics and proposals on their merits.

Politicians like to skirt the issues, to answer attacks with counter-blows which tend to meet the criticisms at a tangent rather than directly.

They fill the air with labels and epithets and slogans and hope it won't be noticed that the real factual matters are lost in the shuffle.

But the citizen can take only so much of this. There are times when he really wants to know the facts, not just a political version of the facts. And this is a desire that today he is finding harder and harder to fulfill.

A prominent midwestern governor recently characterized the situation succinctly when he declared that there is "too much consideration of the source."

In other words, when a statement is made, a policy announced or a proposal offered, the first question is not "What are its merits?" The question is rather: "Who said it?"

Engle Hits Surplus Of Power Tale

WASHINGTON (AP)—Rep. Engle (D-Calif.) challenged Tuesday a Defense Production Administration Advisory Committee report which designates California as an area of increasing power surplus.

The Advisory Committee, in a report to DPA Administrator Manly Fleischmann, urged re-examination of future power projects to concentrate new capacity in areas of greatest deficit.

It described the west, with the exception of the Pacific Northwest, and the Missouri Basin region as areas in which power surplus, although not great, will increase in 1953 and 1954 under present schedules.

Engle told a reporter he was "surprised" at the report because it does not coincide with studies by the Pacific Southwest Interchange Committee in a report to the California Public Utilities Commission.

The Interchange Committee, he said, is composed of private and public power groups.

"The margins of surplus, particularly in the rapidly expanding areas of Northern California, are totally inadequate," Engle asserted.

Thomas Sneers At Ike's Chance

PORTLAND (AP)—Norman Thomas, six times the Socialist Party's candidate for President, had a few remarks on candidates in his 1952 Presidential elections.

He told a Reed College student audience Monday that General Eisenhower's greatest attraction is based on the fact that he is "neither Taft nor Truman."

All General Eisenhower has said in his speeches, Thomas said, "was that he favors free enterprise, Universal Military Training, sound taxation and no inflation. I suppose he also favors the Ten Commandments."

He added: "Whoever is elected, he will in six months time be doing the same thing as any other candidate would have done."

Beer May Go Up Cent Per Bottle

WASHINGTON (AP)—A bottle of your favorite beer may cost a penny or two more after Jan. 28.

The Office of Price Stabilization issued an order Monday night permitting brewers, wholesalers and retailers to adjust prices of all malt beverages. Tables specify the exact increases, but OPS said they will average about one cent for a 12-ounce bottle or can of beer or ale.

The OPS order said the increases were ordered to reflect higher federal taxes and costs of raw materials, containers and labor.

Power Steering On All Cars Seen

DETROIT (AP)—Power steering for passenger automobiles at "relatively low cost" was forecast here Tuesday before the Society of Automotive Engineers.

Original equipment on only one make of passenger car in 1951 is expected to be on at least five makes this year. W. K. Creson, vice president of engineering of the Ross Gear & Tool Co. LaFayette, Ind., reported.

"Further rapid growth of power steering is indicated," he said, "because it lightens work, contributes to safety, and especially because its major technical problems including cost, are yielding to years of testing and development."
