ON THE HOUSE

Houses could be much nearer perfect if building materials would perform only the duties we give them. Wood, for example, would be wood and not a dinner for carpenter ants or termites. And basement walls would not be sponges, virtually stealing drinks right out of the mouths of nearby roots.

In fact, that spongy action of basement walls and floors is one of the toughest problems you encounter in trying to keep basements dry. Engineers call it capillary action. They blame it on inadequate soil drainage, improper masonry work and imperfect waterproofing.

There are two ways to tell if dampness on basement walls or floors is caused by capillary or condensation. Cover a damp area with a sheet of metal foil. Bond it securely to the wall or floor. A very thin coat of plaster of paris will bond it. If moisture forms on the surface, you know it means condensation, because the foil is a vapor barrier and takes on the temperature of the masonry.

You can detect capillary by placing a rubber mat, piece of linoleum, or other watertight material over a suspected area. If the underside of the mat becomes damp, it shows that moisture is coming through the floor or wall by capillary action.

Capillary is especially a problem because it works upward. It can carry moisture up through the foundation wall above grade to where it can attack and rot the sill of a house. The way to prevent this is to have a damp-proofing course installed in a wall to stop dampness from rising above the basement level.

Some authorities recommend this damp-proofing course to be placed 2 to 16 inches above grade. It can be in the form of a copper or other metal sheet, serving the double purpose of a termite shield. Or it can be a layer of slate, or heavy roofing felt laid flat on the masonry, embedded in mortar and extending from one face of the wall to the other.

So in a damp-proofing course is placed directly over the footings of a foundation. This is done especially when the outside of a foundation is to be waterproofed. It stops capillary at the footing, so it can go no higher.

You can often keep walls dry against capillary by lining your basement with a parge coat of cement or stucco. This is keyed into the floor by cutting a trench two inches wide and an inch deep along the bottom of the wall. In mild cases a cement-grout coating may work. But such linings only keep moisture out of the basement and do not retard its upward course. In fact they actually increase it. Engineers tell of cases of hollow masonry walls filling with water up to the floor level. Weepholes on the outside may combat this, but they do not prevent the water from coming in.

There are various patented courses on the market which are supposed to make basements watertight when used on the inside—especially checking capillary (except upwards). The most effective of these are integral waterproofing compounds to be mixed with cement and sand in pargeing walls.

A miniature basement, built of regulation hollow concrete blocks and coated with one of these waterproofing compounds on the inside surface only, floated in a tank of water at the Architects' Samples Corp., in New York, for four or five years before it was removed from the exhibit. No waterproofing of any kind was used on the outside of the porous blocks. Still the inside of the little basement remained perfectly dry at all times.

There are other materials that are merely brushed on wall instead of being troweled on. These compounds are adequate for mild cases of capillary. One is now shown at the Architects' Samples exhibit coated on the outside of cinder blocks while the hollow cores stand full of water.

The Portland Cement Association, however, lacking sufficient practical tests of such products, has not endorsed them, but recommends cement pargeing.

In very mild cases of capillary, heating and ventilating used to combat condensation should be adequate to keep a basement dry.

JACOBY on Canasta

"In a three-handed game," writes a Forest Hills correspondent, "Player A makes a foolish play and melds so that she has only one card left in her hand. She has no canasta, and her best meld is five queens and a joker.

"This is a hopeless situation, because we follow the rule that you need two canastas to meld out. No matter what Player A draws from the stock pile, she can never meld two canastas. In fact, she can never meld anything because she would be unable to meld, discard, and still have a card left in her hand.

"Player B is very happy about all this, because she gets her cards from the unhappy Player A. In a short time Player B has two natural canastas, one mixed canasta, and several other juicy melds.

"Player C now decides to enter the picture. She puts a queen on the discard pile, allowing the foolish player A to pick up the pile and get some cards into her hand.

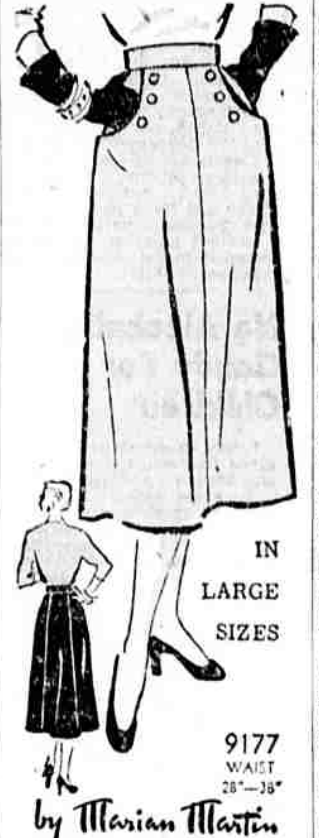

"Player B now does everything but send for the police. She says that Player C has no right to help an opponent deliberately—particularly when it hurts the other opponent.

"Player C says that she would rather give one canasta to Player A than allow Player B to score three or four canastas.

"Player A (the writer) is just happy that she still alive, so she takes no part in the argument. All the same, who is right?"

Player C is absolutely right. It is fair, proper, and also very clever of her to help Player A. Player B has no right to expect favors from her opponents and has no right to complain if they gang up against her.

FORT ROCK

By Don McGehee
For Roberta McGehee

Regular meeting of the Fort Rock Grange was held Saturday Jan. 12, with a very large attendance on hand to see the movies shown by Elgin Cornett and to attend the meeting. All the folks at the Rubie Long Ranch arrived on a sleigh under the command of Shorty Gustafson who was pulling the outfit with a tractor. Wonder where the Old Gray More was? Leon Gilder who is working for Rubie Long at the Harrison place has been snowed in the past week. Guess I'm not the only bachelor in Fort Rock.

Carl Webster came in town today on his tractor for the first time in a week as they are all snowed in up that way.

Monday, Jan. 7, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Enlow of Brookings, Ore. moved into one of D. A. Rutherford's cabins. Enlow will do the falling for the mill on the Hole-in-the-Ground timber. He plans on moving out to his place at Sink this summer. They are the ones who now own the former Clyde Hutchinson ranch.

Wednesday the wind drifted the west road to the Horse Ranch full and it was closed until Floyd Branch arrived with the grader to plow it out. It is open now but is still pretty tough going out.

Tuesday, Burton Brown moved into Fort Rock with his logging equipment to start logging for the mill which plans on starting Tuesday or Wednesday of this coming week.

School was closed Thursday, Jan. 10 as no one could get into town. The roads were all blocked by the high winds Wednesday night.

Dave Rutherford has been busy the past week hauling feed from Bend to the local ranchers who are feeding heavy now due to the snow. Seems as the six inches of snow is pretty short under a foot of snow.

D. A. Rutherford and Don McGehee went to Portland Wednesday to get a new 6-71 series GMC diesel for the mill and returned early Friday.

Mr. C. C. Miles has been quite ill the past week, but is feeling better now.

Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. John Harbison and Scotty, Mr. and Mrs. Daryl Hunt, and Forest Stratton were dinner guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bud Parks.

The weather is still being cursed and discussed in Fort Rock with highest temperature recorded officially this year a scorching 33 above. Lowest this past week was 6 below Friday evening.

Received a letter from Roberta and from what she writes the railroad is getting a workout from David, seems as all those fancy gadgets fascinate the boy, especially the drinking fountain.

HOLLYWOOD (NEA) - Exclusively Yours' director Errol Flynn will play a movie director who clashes with a minister in his independent production of "The Director."

Richard Erdman's telling about the star of a Broadway play who re-wrote a bad script into a hit show, then did a burn over the author taking the bows for the revised version. The star wired him: "If you don't stop taking the credit for this show, I'll play it the way you wrote it."

Overheard by Frank DeVoll: One starlet to another: "It was very strange the way we met—we were introduced."

Ronda Fleming's set for an album of musical comedy tunes with Columbia Records.

Nostalgic note: The doors to silent star Corinne Griffith's Beverly Hills buildings are painted a bright orchid hue. Corinne was known as "The Orchid Lady" back in the days when she was First National's glamor girl.

First U.S. Diplomat Sent To Holy See Back in 1848

By JACK BRUSINI
AP Newscasters

VATICAN CITY—More than 100 years have passed since the United States appointed its first diplomatic representative to the Holy See.

The first man to speak on behalf of the United States at the Vatican was Jacob L. Martin. He died on Aug. 26, 1848, shortly after his appointment here. A darkened tombstone under the black cyphers of the Protestant Cemetery in Rome recalls his death.

"To the memory of J. L. Martin, late Charge d'Affaires of the United States to the Holy See, who died at Rome, Aug. 26, 1848," the tombstone reads.

The United States decided to send its own representative to the Vatican at a crucial point in European history: when Pope Pius IX was showing strong leadership in building the unity of Italy.

After the troublesome period which followed the fall of Napoleon and the European wars, the European powers strengthened their missions at the Vatican.

Pius IX was named on June 16th, 1846, lived through one of the most stormy periods of Italian history, and died a virtual prisoner of the King of Italy on July 7, 1878.

The American appointee arrived two years after the Pontiff had been crowned. Before 1848 the United States had only a consul in Rome.

President James K. Polk, a Democrat, recommended to Congress the appointment of a diplomat to the Vatican Dec. 7, 1847. Many anti-clerical and anti-pope speeches were heard in both Houses, before April 1, 1848, when the President signed the decree appointing the diplomat.

Martin presented his credentials and read a prepared speech considered by writers at the time "noble and dignified, even if read with too much emphasis."

Martin, in his speech, said the Pope "made so many useful and noble reforms that he deserves to have on earth the prize reserved in heaven for good achievements, and who, having deserved the gratitude of his people, has drawn the admiration of the whole world."

Chernult

By VIRGINIA TAYLOR

The Gilchrist TA met Tuesday evening at the high school. After the business meeting, two films loaned by the Bureau of Agriculture were shown. The first was on the legend and history of the Christmas tree and present methods of harvesting.

The second entitled "River Run" was in color and showed the advantages of sustained yield type of logging. The setting was on the Mischias River in Maine. The next meeting will be Farmers' Day, Feb. 12. All members are urged to be there.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Bellavance of Beaver Marsh have returned after a vacation in California. They visited Mr. and Mrs. Frank Magura of Los Angeles, spent Christmas with Mr. and Mrs. A. L. McClure of Bakersfield. The McClures are former residents of Chernult. Then they motored to Vallejo to visit Mrs. Bellavance's sister, Mr. and Mrs. Martin.

Mr. and Mrs. Verne Brader spent the weekend in Eugene at the R. G. Nasons.

Mr. and Mrs. Lew Williams just returned after a business trip to Portland. The Chernult Sunday School will be closed through the month of January due to the record amount of snow. There are about 75 inches on the level at this time. All the old timers seem to think this is a record amount. The water content is about 26 percent higher this year than it was last year at this same period.

George Epperson returned after a short stay in St. Charles Hospital.

Jim Krantz and Ralph Liggett of Southern Pacific signal maintenance crew report pretty rugged going this year. Jim is a Korean veteran and pretty glad to be back with S.P.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Taylor of Bend visited the Bill Taylors Friday.

Both in Saturday night's Knights of Columbus meet and the Philadelphia Enquirer games 24 hours earlier the Milwaukee flash's finishing kick caught Wilt in the home stretch.

The New York FBI agent pushed Gehrmann to a 4:09.3 effort here while losing by a yard. In Philadelphia Fleet Fred chased the Wisconsin ace to a meet mark of 4:10.2, again winding up about a yard back.
