Jurisdictional Row Halts Work

RICHLAND, Wash. 2 - A purisdictional dispute between iron-workers and AFL plumbers and steamfitters virtually halted work on a secret construction project at the Hanford Atomic Works this

E. B. Skeels, manager for the Atkinson Jones Construction Co., said 55 ironworkers walked out Tuesday after a dispute with plumbers and steamfitters over installation of gear on some tanks. The next day 450 ironworkers failed to report for work. Skeels said, and the company laid off another 1,500 workers by night-

Indian Log Sale Draws Fed. Probe

PORTLAND 66 — An 800-acre sale of Indian timberland on the Southern Oregon coast apparently is going to go under investigation.

E. Morgan Pryse, area director of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, told the Oregonian Thursday an investigation from the Department of Interior would arrive to start the investigation Monday.

The newspaper said it also had been investigating the sale for two weeks, and found this:

Gold Beach loggers attempted last summer to buy the property, owned by two Indians. They offered to purchase it for going timber prices, but the Indian Bureau office said it could be sold only by auction.

Later the loggers learned that

by auction

Later the loggers learned that the Bureau, using a new and little-known ruling, had sold the property for the two Indian owners to an Indian woman at Portland for $135,000— about half the going price. Bureau approval was not needed for any sale she might make, and at once she sold it to a white couple for $160,000, who in turn put it out on option for $300,000. One of the men taking the option is a relative of an Indian Bureau official here. The newspaper also said it had found a plywood mill executive who said the property was offered to him later for $800,000. He rejected it as too high.
