Pelton Dam Issue Eyed

SALEM — The State Hydroelectric Commission proposes to settle the Pelton Dam case in the near future.

The commission said Thursday that if Portland General Electric Company and the State Fish Commission cannot settle the points at issue in the next 30 days, then each side should submit arguments to the Hydroelectric Commission.

The commission said it was prepared to issue a preliminary permit for construction as soon as P.G.E. meets the Fish Commission's demand for protection and preservation of fish resources in the Deschutes and Metolius Rivers.

P.G.E. has federal authorization to build the dam on the Deschutes River, but the Fish Commission has continued to oppose the project.

Governor McKay said earlier this week, however, that he felt the Fish Commission and P.G.E. were getting close to an agreement.

Jury Gives Damages In Car Case

Confusion reigned as a Circuit Court jury returned its verdict in a four-day $17,000 damage trial last night after three hours deliberation.

Russell Griffith, the plaintiff, wasn't sure he would get the $1740 general damages awarded him by the jury of nine men and three women. He asked $10,000 general damages and slightly over $7000 special damages for hospital and doctor bills and loss of wages for 19 months.

Defense Attorney Dick Maxwell objected to receiving the verdict as "contrary to law and evidence in the case and as being one which was impossible for the jury to return in light of the instructions given by the court."

Maxwell also, asked for a mistrial on "misconduct of the jury in disobeying instructions of the court in making public the state of their deliberation prior to making a proper verdict."

Maxwell contended the jury could not return a verdict of general damages without awarding special damages.

Judge David R. Vandenberg said he would receive the verdict but would withhold any judgment until he checked further.

Testimony in the case was also confused as to circumstances of the accident April 10, 1949, in which Griffith was run over by a Yellow Cab on S. 6th St.

The defense claimed Griffith stepped in front of the cab driven by Anthony Passarelli as it was going north on S. 6th St.

Griffith, represented by A. C. Yaden, claimed the cab was traveling south and that he was in a crosswalk when hit by the cab.

Members of the jury were G. C. Thompson, Melvane Nitscheim, Henry Oberheide, James Rogers, A. C. Stockstill (foreman), Paul Otterbein, Duane Blackman, Leon R. Blackman, Murel Long and Robert Petrik.

Scouts Make Ewauna Camp

LAKEVIEW — Eighteen Boy Scouts from Troop 12, Lakeview, and Troop 19, Bly, held an overnight camp March 8 and 9 at the old Ewauna camp site on Quartz Mountain.

The camp featured a full program of achievement tests, winter sports competition, an evening get-together and a worship service on Sunday afternoon. The boys made the 1/2 mile trip to camp on skis and snow shoes and found a snow pack of about four feet on the camp area. After lunch on Saturday the boys entered ski competition in slalom, downhill and "wax races" in which the competitors depend entirely on their wax job for speed rather than the use of poles to make a start. All of the boys entered the snow shoe races later in the day and learned that snow shoe running is a tricky venture involving lots of spills and lost snow shoes. A game of "Capture the Flag" was played by teams which were made up by mixing boys from the two troops with Herb Armstrong's team winning this event.

Camp was broken up after Sunday lunch and Reverend Richard Staub, of Bly led Worship Services at 2:30 p.m. in the ravine north of Quartz Mountain Station.

Scouts who attended from Bly were: Harold Winfield, Herbert and Howard Armstrong, Jack Dilivou, Carson Chase, Jim Briley, Billy and Dick Hamilton and Tuck Kendall. Spike Armstrong led the Bly Troop. The Lakeview boys were: Gary Waterhouse, Jim Groom Dan Handbury, Don Snell, Buster

Lumber, Logging Workers Set High Lead In Number Of Accidents, Job Deaths

SALEM — Oregon's lumber and logging workers, who worked only 17 per cent of the man-hours last year, accounted for 35 per cent of all the industrial accidents and 54 per cent of all industrial fatalities in the state.

The State Industrial Accident Commission, which insures 92 per cent of the state's industrial workers, said that the number of industrial accidents in 1951 increased 11.3 per cent over the 1950 total, but employment also increased that much, so the accident frequency rate stayed the same.

The number of fatalities dropped to 150, or five less than in 1950. Of the 69,132 accident claims filed last year, only 31,957 were serious enough to cause loss of time on the job.

The lumber and logging industry had 13,352 of the 31,957 time loss claims, divided as follows: Western Oregon sawmills, 3,375; Western Oregon logging 4,948; Eastern Oregon sawmills 849; Eastern Oregon logging 637; plywood and veneer 563; and other woodworking, 1,090.

The number of time loss claims in the logging and lumber industries was up 2,071 from the 1950 figure.

Of the 150 fatal accidents in 1951, the lumber and logging industries accounted for 82, which was 22 fewer than in 1950.

These accidents included: 60 in Western Oregon logging, 13 in Western Oregon sawmills, 8 in Eastern Oregon logging, and 2 in Eastern Oregon sawmills.

The number of time loss claims and fatalities in other industries: Agriculture, 1,508 and 3; forestry, 75 and 1; fishing, 3 and 0; mining, 247 and 6; building construction, 1,608 and 5; contract construction, 3,017 and 28; manufacturing other than lumber, 4,532 and 4; transportation, communications and public utilities, 1,246 and 8; trade, finance and service, 4,836 and 8; state, county and city government, 1,533 and 5.

The accident commission also received 983 claims for occupational diseases, contrasted with 815 in 1950.

Lumber Ceilings Above Market Rate

PORTLAND — The new fir lumber ceilings are $5 to $10 a thousand higher than the current market on many dimension items, lumber sources here said Friday.

This is due, they said, to a market drop following compilation of figures on which the ceilings were based. However, there has been some strengthening on green dimensions this week.

On some special items there is a great spread. Ship decking for example, is listed at up to $50 under the ceilings. Carl C. Donough, district OPS director, said that on some items the new ceilings would bring "slight reductions."
